

Gifts of the Theological Seminary,
PRINCETON, N. J.

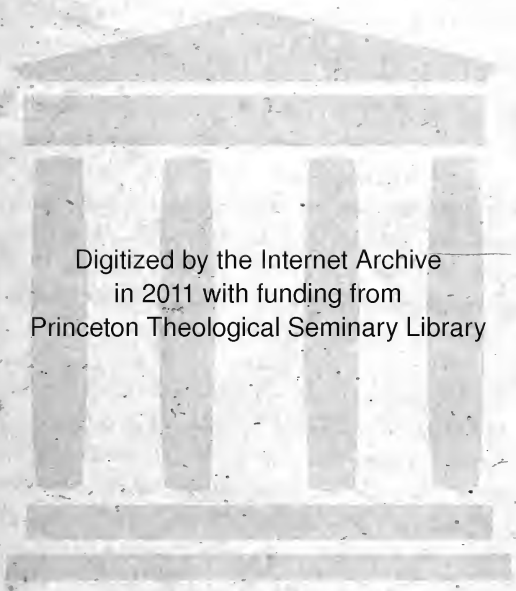

Presented by Mr Samuel Agnew of Philadelphia, Pa.

Agnew Coll. on Baptism, No. 12

SCB
10508

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2011 with funding from Princeton Theological Seminary Library

GABRIELIST MANUAL:

CONTAINING THE HISTORY OF THE SECT, AND THE DOCTRINE OF THE SECT.

BY

JAMES A. GABRIEL, ESQ.

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO.

NEW YORK: PUBLISHED BY

W. H. BROWN, 1853.

THE AUTHOR'S ADDRESS IS GABRIEL'S OFFICE, 100 N. 3RD ST., PHILADELPHIA.

1853.

THE

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

130 St. George Street, Toronto, Ontario

THE BAPTIST MANUAL:

A SELECTION FROM THE SERIES OF PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION

AND

SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY,

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF FAMILIES;

AND AS AN EXPOSITION OF THE DISTINGUISHING SENTIMENTS OF THE DENOMINATION.

I praise you—that ye—keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you. 1 Cor. xi. 2.

PHILADELPHIA.
PUBLISHED AT THE SOCIETY'S DEPOSITORY,
NO. 21 SOUTH FOURTH STREET.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The increasing demand for THE BAPTIST MANUAL, has induced the Board of the American Baptist Publication and Sunday School Society, to issue a new edition. In order to give a more uniform appearance to the work, they have omitted some of the titles which were prefixed to the different tracts; they have removed from the plates the numbers intended to designate the pages of the vol. to which the tract belonged, and in other minute alterations have endeavoured to improve the appearance of this interesting manual. The table appended to the "Brief History of the Burman Mission," has also been corrected to the present time, through the kindness of Br. S. Peck, one of the Secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions, thus rendering it much more valuable.

The object of this publication will be learned from the original Preface, which is retained, and the revised edition is now sent forth with the earnest prayer that it may prove an efficient instrument in removing error, and in promoting the practice of the truth.

PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1841.

PREFACE.

THE object of the Board of Managers of the Baptist General Tract Society, in sending forth the following selection from the Series of its publications, is three-fold. They wish to engage, more widely, the attention of their brethren in the United States to the Society, and to awaken an interest in its behalf, by diffusing a knowledge of the character of its publications; to furnish to members of Baptist Churches, and to Baptist families, a volume of convenient size, which shall be profitable for doctrine, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness;—a volume which, with the Divine blessing, may promote their growth in Grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; and to furnish to those who may be seeking information respecting our views and practices as a denomination, the means of acquaintance with those views and practices, and with the grounds on which they rest.

Agreeing with the great body of evangelical Christians of other denominations, in the fundamental principles of doctrinal belief, the Baptists yet differ from many of them in their views of Church order; and in one important respect, that of Christian Baptism—they differ from them all.

With every other Protestant denomination they take their stand against the corruptions of the church of Rome, but considering Infant Baptism, both in the subject and the mode, as it is practised, to be one of those corruptions, they bear their testimony on this point alike against the Papist, the Protestant, and the Dissenter.

They believe, with their Protestant brethren of every name, that the Bible is a sufficient, and the only rule of faith and practice. With them they repair to the law and the testimony for light and direction: but they are unable to find a Divine sanction for the baptism of any but those who believe; or authority for considering the use of water in any other form than that of immersion to be baptism. And feeling the obligation to walk in the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, they fear to follow the example of their brethren of other denominations any further than they can see them treading in the footsteps of Christ.

The separate position which the views of the Baptist churches in regard to this ordinance, have obliged them to take with respect to the churches of every other denomination, has ever exposed them to animadversion; their principles have often been misrepresented; and they are, even at this day, notwithstanding that the Baptist denomination is now the largest Protestant denomination in the United States, extensively misunderstood.

The Board have thought it due to the denomination and to the cause of truth, to furnish to the honest inquirer the means of an acquaintance with our sentiments, in a convenient form: they have accordingly included in the following selection, such tracts from their series as will give the views of the denomination on most, if not all, those points on which they have been misapprehended. The candid will here learn, that although we consider immersion essential to baptism, and baptism essential to church-membership, we do not consider it essential to salvation: that although we are strenuous for the preservation of soundness in the faith, we yet have no fellowship with the faith which is not productive of good works; and that although we are firm in the conviction that “the purpose of God according to election”—“the election of grace”—will stand, we yet believe that it is a part of his purpose to employ the instrumentality of his saints in gathering his elect into his kingdom; and that therefore it is as much their duty to labor for the conversion of the world as it would be if he had left us to gather a knowledge of his purpose solely from his commands.

This volume is dedicated to the cause of Truth and Piety; and commended to the candid perusal of all of every name who cherish a love of the one and the practice of the other; with the prayer that it may minister to the glory of the Saviour, by bringing his people to a close conformity to his image and his will.

C.

Philadelphia, March 11, 1835.

The first of these is the fact that the child is not a passive recipient of knowledge but an active participant in the learning process. This is particularly true in the case of language learning, where the child is constantly interacting with the environment and adjusting his understanding of the world as he goes along. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for these are skills that must be learned through practice and experience.
 The second point is that the child is not a blank slate but a being who brings to the learning process a wealth of knowledge and experience from his previous interactions with the world. This knowledge is often unconscious and is not always accessible to the child's conscious mind. It is this unconscious knowledge that often makes it so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child must first learn to overcome his unconscious resistance to the learning process.
 The third point is that the child is not a single entity but a complex being who is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing.
 The fourth point is that the child is not a single entity but a complex being who is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing.

The fifth point is that the child is not a single entity but a complex being who is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing.

The sixth point is that the child is not a single entity but a complex being who is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing. This is why it is so difficult to teach a child to read or to write, for the child's understanding of the world is constantly changing and growing.

CONTENTS.

1. The Great Question Answered.
2. The Grace of God and a Holy Life.
3. The Practical influence of Faith.
4. The Scripture Guide to Baptism, by R. Pengilly.
5. Practical Uses of Baptism.
6. Terms of Communion.
7. Duty of Believers to Profess Religion.
8. Discipline of the Primitive Churches.
9. Duty of Church Members to each other.
10. Duty of Church Members to their Pastors.
11. Ministerial gifts to be sought out and encouraged.
12. History of the Burman Mission.
13. Dialogue on Missions.
14. Mrs. Wade's Addresses.
15. The Vineyard—A Parable.
16. Booth on Communion.
17. On Bigotry.
18. Duty of giving Christian Instruction to children.
19. The Christian's Stewardship.

THE GREAT QUESTION ANSWERED.

And he brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—Acts xvi. 30, 31.

THE GREAT QUESTION ANSWERED.

PART I.

THAT great numbers of people, even in this Christianized country, are ignorant in the way of salvation, is too evident to be denied. It is manifestly no part of their concern, any more than if they were in no danger of being lost, or there had never been such a thing as salvation heard of. Nor is this true only of weak and illiterate people; men, who in all other concerns are wise, in these, things have no knowledge or sense to direct them. The evil, therefore, cannot be ascribed to simple ignorance, which, as far as it goes, tends to excuse; but to be willingly ignorant, saying unto God, "Depart from us—we desire, not the knowledge of thy ways."

God, however, has a witness in every man's conscience. Every man, whatever he may pretend, feels himself to be a sinner, and to need forgiveness. Ignorant and idolatrous as the Philippian Jailer had been all his life, yet, when death looked him in the face, he trembled and cried for mercy. And if it were thus with the heathen, much more with those who have been educated under the light of revelation. The most careless and thoughtless cannot stand the approach of death. The courage of the most hardened infidel commonly fails him at that solemn period.

Reader! Are you one of the many who scarcely ever think of these things; and whose chief concern is, what you shall eat, what you shall drink, and werewithal you shall be clothed? Let the anxiety of a heathen reprove you. If like other animals, you were made only to eat and drink, and figure away for a few years, and then to sink into nothing, you might well throw aside every care, except that which respects your present gratification. But you are of an order of beings distinguished from all others in the creation. In your nature is united mortality and immortality; the dust of the ground, and the breath of the Almighty. Life to you is but the introduction to existence, a short voyage which will land you on the shores of eternity. You are surrounded by a number of objects, and feel an interest in each. You build houses, plant orchards, rear animals, and form to yourselves a home; but you are not at nome. Your feelings associate with these things, but they are not fit associates for you. You may have a portion in all that is doing in your family, and in your country, yea, in some sort, in all that is done under the sun; but this is not sufficient for you. The time draweth nigh, when there will be an end to all these things, and they will be as though they had not been; but you will still live. You will witness the wreck of nature itself, and survive it; and stand before the Son of Man at his appearing and kingdom. Can you think of these things, and be unconcerned?

Or, though you be an immortal and accountable creature, (as your conscience tells you you are, whenever you consult it, and sometimes when you would gladly shut your ears against it,) yet, if you had not sinned against your Maker, there would be no cause for alarm. A sinless creature has nothing to fear from a righteous God. The approach of an assize, with all its solemn pomp, does not terrify the innocent; neither would judgment or eternity inspire the least degree of dread, if you were guiltless. But you are a sinner, a corrupt branch of a corrupt stock. God placed, as I may say, a generous confidence in our species, and required nothing in return but love; but we have returned him evil for good. You, for yourself, are conscious that you have done so, and that it is in your very nature to do evil.

Or, though you be what is called a sinner, yet if sincere your misfortune, rather than your fault, you might fly for refuge to the equity of your Maker. But this is not the case. Whatever may be said as to the manner in which you became a sinner, and however you may wish to excuse yourself on that ground, your own conscience bears witness, that what you are, you choose to be, and occasionally reproaches you for being so. You may speculate upon sin as a kind of hereditary disease, which is merely a misfortune, not a fault; but if so, why do you feel guilt on account of it any more than of the other? Why do you not also acquit others of blame, where the evil is directed against you? You do not think of excusing a fellow-creature, when he injures you, upon any such grounds as you allege in excuse of transgression against God. If the party be rational and voluntary, you make no further inquiry; but, without any hesitation, pronounce him criminal. Out of your own mouth therefore shall you be judged. The inability that you feel to do good, is entirely owing to your having no heart to it. It is of the same nature as that of an unprincipled servant, who cannot seek his master's interest, but is impelled by his selfishness to be always defrauding him. You would not hold such a servant blameless. Nor will God hold you so. You are not destitute of those powers which render us accountable beings, but merely of a heart to make use of them for God. You take pleasure in knowledge, but desire not the knowledge of his ways; in conversation, but the mention of serious religion strikes you dumb; in activity, but in his service you are as one that is dead. You are fond of news; but that which angels announced, and the Son of God came down to publish, gives you no pleasure. All these things prove, beyond a doubt, where the inability lies.

Or, if sin should be allowed to be your fault, yet, if it were a small offence, an imperfection, that might be overlooked, or so slight a matter that you could atone for it by repentance, prayers, or tears, or any effort of your own, there might be less reason for alarm. But neither is this the case. If sin were so light a matter as it is commonly made, how is it that a train of the most awful curses should be denounced against the sinner? Is it possible, that a just and good God would curse his creatures in basket and in store, in their houses and in their fields, in their lying down and rising up, and in all that they set their hands to, for a mere trifle, or an imperfection that might be overlooked? If sin were a light thing, how is it that the Father of mercies should have doomed all mankind to death, and to all the miseries that prepare its way, on account of it? How is it that wicked men die under such fearful apprehensions? Above all, how is it that it should require the eternal Son of God to become incarnate, and to be made a sacrifice, to atone for it? But if sin be thus offensive to God, then are you in a fearful situation. If you had the whole world to offer for your ransom, and could shed rivers of tears, and give even the fruit of your body for the sin of your soul, it would be of no account. Were that which you offered ever so pure it could have no influence whatever towards atoning for your past guilt, any more than the tears of a murderer can atone for blood: but this is not the case—those very performances by which you hope to appease the divine anger, are more offensive to him than the entreaties of a detected adulteress would be to her husband, while her heart, as he well knows, is not with him, but with her paramours. You are, whether you know it or not, a lost sinner, and that in the strongest sense of the term. Men judge of sin only by its open acts, but God looketh directly at the heart. Their censures fall only on particular branches of immorality which strike immediately at the well-being of society; but God views the root of the mischief, and takes into consideration all its mischievous bearings. Know thou therefore, and consider, that it is an evil thing and bitter that thou hast done; that thou hast departed from the living God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

Finally. Though your sin be exceeding offensive to your Creator, and though you can make no atonement for it, yet if you could resist his power, escape his hand, or endure his wrath, your unconcernedness might admit of some kind of apology. Surely I need not prove to you, that you cannot resist his power—what is your strength, when tried. You may, in the hour of health and festivity, and when in company with others like yourself, look big and put out great words, but they are words only. If God do but touch you with his afflicting hand, your strength and your courage instantly forsake you. And will you go on to provoke Omnipotence? If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, how wilt thou contend with horses? If in the land of peace thou hast been overcome, how wilt thou do in the swellings of Jordan?—Neither canst thou escape his hand; for whither wilt thou flee? If, attentive to thy safety, the rocks could fall on thee, or the mountains cover thee, yet should they not be able to hide thee from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. God hath beset thee behind and before, and laid his hand upon thee. Whither wilt thou go from his Spirit? Whither wilt thou flee from his presence? If thou ascend to heaven, he is there! Or if thou make thy bed in hell behold he is there!—The only question that remains, is, whether you can endure his displeasure? And this must surely be a forlorn hope! By the horrid imprecations which we so commonly hear from hardened sinners, who call upon God to damn their bodies and souls, it would seem as if they laid their account with damnation, and wished to familiarize it; as if they had made a covenant with death, and with hell were at agreement: but when God shall lay judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, these refuges of lies will suddenly be swept away.

Reader ! Can thine heart endure, and thine hands be strong, in the day that he shall deal with thee ? Think of the wrath to come. If it were founded in caprice or injustice, supported by conscious innocence, you might possibly bear it; but, should you perish, you will be destitute of this. Conscience will eternally say, Amen, to the justice of your sufferings. If you had mere justice done you, unmixed with mercy, your sufferings would be more tolerable than they will be. If you perish, you must have your portion with Bethsaida and Chorazin. Goodness gives an edge to justice. The displeasure of a kind and merciful being, (and such is the wrath of the Lamb) is insupportable.

If, after having heard these things, and lived in a country where they are fully declared, you do not feel interested by them, you have reason to fear that God has given you up to hardness of heart, and that that language is fulfilled in you. Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and not understand; and seeing, ye shall see and not perceive: for the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. Remember that in Old Testament times, when God blessed his people Israel with singular temporal blessings, he punished their transgressions mostly by temporal judgments; but now that we are favoured with singular spiritual privileges, the neglect of them is commonly punished with spiritual judgments.

But whether you will hear, or whether you will forbear, I will declare unto you the only way of salvation. That which was addressed to the Philippian Jailer, is addressed to you. God hath so loved the world, as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish but have everlasting life. He has given him not only to teach us the good and the right way, but to be made a sacrifice for sin, and as such to be himself the way. He suffered from the hands of wicked men; but this was not all; it pleased the Lord to bruise him. He hath put him to grief, and made his soul an offering for sin. He commanded his sword to awake against him, that through his death he might turn his hand in mercy towards perishing sinners. He hath set him forth to be a propitiation to declare his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. This is the only sacrifice which is well-pleasing to God. All that went before, were of no account but as they pointed to it; and all the prayers and praises of sinful creatures are no otherwise acceptable than as presented through it. It is not for you to go about to appease the divine displeasure, or to recommend yourself to the Saviour by any efforts of your own; but, despairing of help from every other quarter, to receive the atonement which Christ hath made. To this you are invited and that in the most pressing terms. He that made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, hath on this ground committed to his servants the ministry of reconciliation, and they, as ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by them, pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

The blessings of pardon, peace, and eternal life, are compared to a feast, or marriage-supper, which the King of heaven and earth hath made for his Son; and he hath commanded his servants to go forth, as to the highways and hedges, and to invite without distinction; yea and to compel them to come in. Nor is this all: you are exhorted and commanded to believe in Christ, on pain of damnation. All your other sins expose you merely to the curse of the law; but the sin of unbelief, if persisted in, will expose you, like the barren fig-tree, to the curse of the Saviour from which there is no redemption.

Say not in thine heart, "All these things I have believed from my youth up." You may indeed have been taught them, and have received them as a tradition from your fathers: but such faith is dead, and consequently unoperative. It is the same as that of the Jews towards Moses, which our Saviour would not admit to be faith.

If ye believed Moses, saith he, ye would believe me, for he wrote of me. It is no better than the faith of devils; and in some respects has less influence; for they believe and tremble, whereas you believe and are at ease.

But it may be you will say, I have examined Christianity for myself, and am fully persuaded it is true. Yet it has no effect upon you any more than if you disbelieved it, unless it be to restrain you within the limits of exterior decorum. Your faith, therefore, must still be dead, being alone. Believing in Christ is not the exercise of a mind at ease, casting up the evidences for and against, and then coldly assenting, as in a question of science, to that side which seems to have the greatest weight of proof. To one whose mind is subdued to the obedience of faith, there is indeed no want of evidence; but it is not so much from external proofs, as from its own intrinsic glory, and suitableness to his case as a perishing sinner, that he feels himself impelled to receive it. The Gospel is too interesting, and hath too much influence on our past and future conduct, to be an object of unfeeling speculation. It is a hope set before us, which none but those who are ready to perish, will ever embrace. To believe it, is to renounce our own wisdom, our own righteousness, and our own will, each of which is directly opposed to it; and to fall into the arms of mere grace, through the atoning blood of the cross. If the good news of salvation be not in this manner believed; it signifies but little what speculative notions we may entertain concerning it; for where there is no renunciation of self, there is no dependance upon Christ for justification: and where there is no such dependance, there is no revealed interest in that important blessing; but the curses and threatenings of God stand in all their force against us.

If, after all your examinations, you continue to make light of the gospel feast, and prefer your farms, merchandizes, or any thing else before it, you will be found to have no part in it. Yet, be it known unto you, that the feast shall not be unattended. Heaven shall not go without inhabitants, nor Christ without reward, whether you be saved or lost. The stone set at nought by man, is nevertheless the head of the corner. Consider then, take advice, and speak your mind.

THE GREAT QUESTION ANSWERED.

PART II.

HAD the question, proposed by the Jailer, been addressed to the first genius upon earth, unacquainted with the Gospel, it could not have been answered. Had it been put to all the great philosophers of antiquity, one by one, and to all the learned doctors among the Jews, none of them could have resolved it to any good purpose. Nor amidst all the boasted light of modern times, can a single unbeliever be found, who could know what to do with it. Yet it is a question which arises in every man's mind, at one period or other of his life; and a question which must be resolved, or we are lost for ever.

Reader! This important question may have already occupied your mind. An alarming sermon, a death in your family, a hint from a faithful friend, or, it may be, an impressive dream, has awakened your attention. You cannot take pleasure, as formerly, in worldly company and pursuits; yet you have no pleasure in religion. You have left off many vices, and have complied with many religious duties, but can find no rest for your soul. The remembrance of the past is bitter; the prospect of the future may be more so. The thought of God troubles you. You have even wished that you had never been born, or that you could now shrink back into non-existence, or that you were any thing rather than a man. But you are aware that all these wishes are vain. You do exist; your nature is stamped with immortality; you must go forward and die, and stand before this holy Lord God!

If these, or such like exercises, occupy your mind, the question of the Philippian Jailer is yours; and to you let me address a few directions, included or implied in the answer.

If by this question you mean, What can you do to appease the wrath of God, or recommend yourself as a fit object of his mercy? What can you do as a good deed, or the beginning of a course of good deeds, in reward of which he may bestow upon you an interest in the Saviour? I answer, Nothing. An interest in Christ, and eternal life, are indeed given as a reward; but not of any thing we have done, or can do; no, not by divine assistance; it is the reward of the obedience of Christ unto death. To us it is of mere grace, and as such must be received. Though faith is in itself a holy exercise of the mind, yet, as that by which we are justified, it is directly opposed to doing. "To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." He that worketh, seeks to obtain life and the favour of God, in some way or other, as a reward; but he that believeth, receives it as a free gift to the unworthy. And let me apprize you, that this is the state of mind you must be brought to, or you must perish for ever. So far as you think of doing any thing, call it what you may, with a hope of being pardoned and justified for its sake, so far you reject the only way of salvation, and have reason to expect your portion with unbelievers.

Let me deal freely with you. Yours is a most serious situation. The Gospel-rest is before you; and if you enter not in, it will be because of unbelief. You know the answer given to the Jailer; and this is the only answer that can with safety be given to you. Consider, and beware, as you regard your eternal salvation, that you take up your rest in nothing short of it.

But, in the first place, let me declare unto you the Gospel of God, which you are directed to believe. If this meet your case; if, rightly understood, it approve itself not only to your conscience, but your whole soul; if it accord with your desires, as it undoubtedly does with your necessities, all is well, and well for ever. I shall not trouble you with the opinions of men as to what the Gospel is, nor even with my own, but direct you to the account given of it by its Author. The New Testament informs us what it is, in such plain and pointed language, that he who runs may read: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life."—"Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you, first of all, that which I also received, now that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.”—“This is a faithful saying, (a truth of such importance as to have become a kind of Christian proverb,) and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief.”—“WE PREACH Christ crucified.”—“I determined NOT TO KNOW ANY THING among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified.”—“THIS IS THE RECORD, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.”

It is not meant by these brief descriptions of the Gospel, that there is no other truth necessary to be believed; but that the doctrine of the cross, properly embraced, includes all others, or draws after it the belief of them.

The import of this Gospel, is, that God is in the right, and we are in the wrong; that we have transgressed against him without cause, and are justly exposed to everlasting punishment; that mercy, originating purely in himself, required, for the due honour of his government, to be exercised through the atonement of his beloved Son; that with this sacrifice God is well-pleased, and can, consistently with all his perfections, pardon and accept of any sinner, whatever he hath done, who believeth in him.

What say you to this? The truth of it hath been confirmed by the most unquestionable proofs. It first began to be spoken by the Lord himself, and it has been confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness with signs, and wonders, and divers miracles. The witness of the three in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, is borne to this; namely, that “God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son;” and to this also is directed the witness of the three on earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood. Can you subscribe to this great truth, in all its bearings, and rest the salvation of your soul upon it; or do you doubt whether you be so guilty, so helpless, and in so dangerous a state as this doctrine supposes? Is it as one of the chief of sinners that you view yourself; or does it grate upon your feelings to receive forgiveness in that humble character? In suing for mercy, are you content to stand on the same low ground as if you were a convict actually going to be executed; or does your heart secretly pine after a salvation less humiliating, in which some account might be made of that difference of character by which you may have been distinguished from the vilest of men, and in which you might be in some degree a co-operator with God? Does that which pleases God, please you; or does your mind revolt at it? It meets all your wants; but none of your prejudices, proud thoughts, or vicious propensities; all these must come down, and be made a sacrifice to it. Can you subscribe to it on these terms?

I am well aware, that the great concern of persons, in your situation, is to obtain peace of mind; and any thing which promises to afford this, attracts your attention. If this Gospel be believed with all your heart, it will give you peace. This is the good and the old way; walk in it, and you shall find rest for your soul: but it is not every thing which promises peace, that will ultimately afford it. It is at our peril to offer you other consolation; and at yours to receive it.

Consider, and beware, I say again, as you regard your eternal salvation, that you take up your rest in nothing short of Christ! Particularly,

1. Beware of brooding over your guilt in a way of unbelieving despondence; and so of standing aloof from the hope of mercy. Say not, "My sins have been too great, too numerous, or too aggravated, to be forgiven." "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." Believest thou this? You are not straitened in him; but in your own bowels. God's thoughts are not as your thoughts, not his ways as your ways: as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are his thoughts higher than your thoughts, and his ways than your ways. On the sinner that returneth to our God he bestoweth abundant pardon. It is not, "If thou canst do any thing, help me;" but, "If thou canst believe—all things are possible to him that believeth." Of what dost thou doubt? Of his all-sufficiency? He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him. Of his willingness? Ought not his gracious invitations to satisfy thee on this head? Can you imagine that he would proclaim, saying, "Whosoever thirsteth, let him come unto me and drink," and yet be reluctant to gratify the desires of those that come to him? Objections, on the ground of the greatness of guilt and unworthiness, may seem to wear the face of modesty and humility; but after all, it becomes you to consider whether they be any other than the workings of a self-righteous spirit. If you could find in your heart to accept of mercy as one of the chief of sinners, all your objections would vanish in a moment. One sees, in your very tears of despondency, a pining after acceptance with God, by something in yourself. Were they put into words, they would amount to something like this—"If I had but somewhat to recommend me to the Saviour, I could go to him with assurance; or if I had been less wicked, I might hope for acceptance." And what is this but making good the complaint of our Saviour? "Ye will not come to me, that ye may have life!" Such longings after something to recommend you to the Saviour, are no other than "going about to establish your own righteousness;" and while this is the case, there is great danger of your being given up to imagine that you find the worthiness in yourself which your soul desireth.

2. Beware of dwelling, in a way of self-complacency, on those reformations which may have been produced by the power of conviction. This is another of those workings of unbelief, by which many have come short of believing, and so of entering into rest. There is no doubt but your convictions have driven you from the commission of grosser vices, and probably have frightened you into a compliance with various religious duties: but these are only the loppings off of the branches of sin; the root remains unmortified. It is not the breaking off of your sins that will turn to any account, unless they be broken off by righteousness; and this will not be the case but by believing in Christ. The power of corruption may have only retired into its strong holds, from whence, if you embrace not the Gospel-way of salvation, it will soon come forth with increased energy, and sweep away all your fancied reformations. Nay, it is very possible, that while the lusts of the flesh have seemed to recede, those of the mind, particularly spiritual pride, may have already increased in strength. If, indeed, you dwell on your reformations, and draw comfort from them, it is an undoubted proof that it is so; and then instead of being reformed, or nearer the kingdom of heaven than you were before, your character is more offensive to God than ever. Publicans and harlots are more likely to enter into it than you. Besides, if your reformations were ever so virtuous, (which they are not, in his sight by whom actions are weighed,) yet, while you are an unbeliever, they cannot be accepted. You yourself must first be accepted in the Beloved, ere any thing that you offer can be received. "It does not consist with the honour of the majesty of the King of heaven and earth, to accept of any thing from a condemned malefactor, condemned by the justice of his holy law, till that condemnation be removed."

3. Beware of deriving comfort from the distress of mind which you may have undergone, or from any feelings within you. Some religious people will tell you, that these workings of mind are a sign that God has mercy in reserve for you; and that if you go on in the way you are in, waiting as at the pool, all will be well in the end: but such language requires great qualification. It is not your being distressed in mind, that will prove any thing in your favour, but the issue of it. Saul was distressed, as well as David; and Judas, as well as Peter. When the murderers of our Lord were pricked in their hearts, Peter did not comfort them by representing this their unhappiness as a hopeful sign of conversion; but exhorted them to repent and be baptized every one of them, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins.

And thus it was with Paul and Silas, when the Jailer was impressed with fear and dismay: they gave him no encouragement from thence, but preached Jesus Christ as the only source of hope. If one who had slain a man in Israel, had stopped short of the city of refuge, and endeavoured to draw comfort from the alarm which he had felt, lest the avenger of blood should overtake him, would he have been safe? There is no security to you or to any man, but in fleeing immediately to the Gospel-refuge, and laying hold of the hope set before you. If you take comfort from your distress, you are in imminent danger of stopping short of Christ, and so of perishing for ever. Many, no doubt, have done so; and that which they have accounted waiting at the pool for the moving of the waters, has proved no other than settling upon a false foundation. Indeed it must needs be so; for as there is no medium, in one that has heard the Gospel, between faith and unbelief, he that does not believe in Jesus for salvation, if he have any hope of it, must derive that hope from something in himself.

4. Beware of considering faith itself the meritorious ground of acceptance with God. It is true that believing is an act of yours, and an act of obedience to God. Far be it from me that I should convey an idea of any thing short of a cordial reception of the Gospel being accompanied with salvation: a reception that involves a renunciation of self-righteousness, and a submission to the righteousness of God. But if you consider it as a species of sincere obedience, which God has consented to accept, instead of a perfect one; and if you hope to be justified in reward of it, you are still "going about to establish your own righteousness" under an evangelical name. This is the commandment of God, that ye believe on the name of his Son. Faith is an act of obedience to God, yet it is not as such that it justifies us, but as receiving Christ, and bringing us into a living union with him, for whose sake alone we are accepted and saved

Finally. Beware of taking comfort from any impulse, or unfounded persuasion that your sins are forgiven, and that you are a favourite of God. Many are deceived in this way, and mistake such a persuasion for faith itself. When a sinner is driven from all his former holds, it is not unusual for him, instead of falling at the feet of Christ as utterly lost, to catch at any new conceit, however unscriptural and absurd, if it will but afford him relief. If in such a state of mind he receives an impression, perhaps in the words of scripture, that God has forgiven and accepted him, or dreams that he is in heaven, or reads a book, or hears a sermon, favourable to such a method of obtaining relief, he eagerly imbibes it, and becomes intoxicated with the delicious draught. The joy of hope, being so new and unexpected a thing, and succeeding to great darkness and distress, produces a wonderful change in his mind. Now he thinks he has discovered the light of life, and feels as one that has lost his burden. Now he has found out the true religion; and all that he read or heard before, not affording him relief, is false doctrine, or legal preaching. Being treated also as one of the dear children of God by others of the same description, he is attached to his flatterers, and despises those, as graceless, who would rob him of his comforts, by warning him against "the lie which is in his right hand."

I do not mean to say, that all consolation which comes suddenly to the mind, or by the impression of a passage of scripture, any more than by reading, or hearing, is delusive. It is not the manner in which we obtain relief, that is of any account, but what it is that comforts us. If it be the doctrine of the cross, or any revealed truth pertaining to it, this is Gospel consolation; but if it be a supposed revelation from heaven, of something which is not taught in the Scriptures, that is a species of comfort on which no dependence can be placed. A believer may be so far misled, as to be carried away with it; but, if a man have nothing better, he is still an unbeliever.

If ever you obtain that rest for your soul, which will bear the light, it must be not from any thing within you, but by looking out of yourself to Christ, as revealed in the Gospel. You may afterwards know that you have passed from death unto life, by the love you bear to the brethren, and by many other scriptural evidences; and from the time of your embracing the Gospel-remedy, you may be conscious of it, and so enjoy the hope of the promised salvation; but your first relief, if it be genuine, will be drawn directly from Christ, or from finding that in the doctrine of salvation through his death, which suits your wants and wishes as a perishing sinner.

DEATH BY ADAM, LIFE BY CHRIST

OUR state by nature makes us tremble; but the grace of God, in Christ Jesus, gives us consolation. Oh! how precious and sweet must the gift of Jesus Christ unto eternal life be to us, when we rightly consider the sin of Adam, which hath reigned unto death! (Rom. v. 14.) Let us, with faith and repentance, embrace our Saviour, who came to deliver us from the consequences of the fall, and from sin and death, to destroy the works of the devil, and to bruise the Serpent's head.

Adam, by his fall, plunged us into misery; let us now fly to Jesus, who hath redeemed and saved us. Let us cast ourselves into His arms. He will sprinkle us with the blood of atonement for our sins, and bestow on us grace sufficient to change our hearts, and to establish them; a covenant firmer than that of nature; a happiness more lasting than that of the state of innocence.

SUPERVILLE

THE GRACE OF GOD, AND A HOLY LIFE

THERE is in many, a strange desire of separating what God hath joined together—the grace of God and the righteousness of man. One set of persons exalt the grace of God, and speak in the loftiest terms of the gospel of Jesus Christ; but say little of the duties of man and the obedience which is required of him: as if the bare knowledge of the gospel scheme were to be substituted in the place of true holiness; or as if it were wholly unnecessary to enter into the detail of that obedience which man ought to perform. Others equally unreasonable, insist exclusively upon the importance of moral practice, and view with jealousy every attempt to give prominence to the doctrines of grace; as if a blow were thereby aimed at morality, and as if the obligation to a righteous life were thereby undermined. Both are equally in error. The grace of God supplies a most efficacious motive to holiness; and holiness is the inseparable result of the grace of God, when it is received into the heart. The one is the means, the other the end. Can the end be answered without the means? Look at the success of those philosophising schemes of reformation which inculcated the beauty and the excellency of virtue, but applied no adequate motive to the mind. On the other hand, can the doctrines of Christianity be of any use, except as they conduce to their proper end? To allege this would be to degrade the gospel, since its superiority above every other moral system arises from its more powerful effects in meliorating the character and conduct of those who embrace it. In perfect harmony with this view of the subject we are told in scripture, that the Son of God gave himself for us for the express purpose of redeeming us from all iniquity, and purifying unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works.

In order, therefore, to acquire a just view of the Christian dispensation, we must regard a right system of faith, and a righteous and holy life as indissolubly connected. We must consider it as a vain attempt effectually to reform our conduct, unless we embrace the holy principles which Christianity inspires. And on the other hand, we must deem it unnatural, and even impious, to hold the truth in unrighteousness; to exalt the doctrines of the gospel, and to neglect the practical effects which these doctrines were intended to produce. Few indeed avowedly separate the doctrines of the grace of God from a righteous and holy life, but many do it practically. Many, who will fully admit the holy influence of the gospel, yet act as if the bare reception of its truths were a kind of compensation for, at least, what they would call the lesser sins of man. Hence, with a strange inconsistency, they will say, such a person is, without doubt, a religious man, but he is passionate. Another is exceedingly pious, but he is sullen and morose. A third is very devout but he is worldly. Is it not plain that a separation is here made between religion and its practical influence? It is supposed that a man can be religious, and yet not gentle: pious, and yet not benevolent: devout, and yet not detached from the world. In the same inconsistent manner do multitudes reason, who are religious on the Sunday, while they are wholly engrossed with the world through the week: who can attend with the same punctuality the church and the theatre: who would not on any account neglect the preaching of the gospel, but in their families discover nothing of its benign influence: who very carefully settle the articles of their faith, and hold them strenuously; but take little pains to regulate their temper, evidently over-looking that necessary duty, as if it were no essential branch of religion. In a word, we are chargeable with the same inconsistency whenever the holy doctrines which we believe are not embraced as principles of action, influencing and regulating our whole conduct, teaching us how to feel, to act, to suffer, in our families, in our shops, in our retirements, in our converse with the world; in short, in all the various circumstances of life.

The inconsistency which I have been condemning, is greatly supported by our resting in general ideas of religion without entering minutely into the details of its duties; and by our being satisfied with approving generally of its doctrines without a particular application of them to our own cases and circumstances. On the other hand, nothing shows more decidedly a truly upright spirit than the full and complete manner in which religion is applied, with distinctness and particularity, to a man's own case, carried through all the business of life, and made to regulate every part of the conduct. It is an easy thing to express an admiration of the scriptures, to speak in high terms of an excellent treatise on religion, or to be loud in commendation of a pious discourse. But the only solid proof which we can give in either case of cordial approbation, consists in the close and faithful application of what we have read or heard to our own consciences; in the alteration we are induced to make in those parts of our temper and conduct which have been shown to be wrong; and in the abiding nature of the effects which, through the blessing of God, have been produced in us. Herod knew that John was a just and holy man; he heard him gladly and did many things because of him. But when John plainly applied his preaching to Herod's own case, and said it is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife, then the insincerity of his heart appeared; he could not bear the application of the doctrine which he had previously professed to approve; and he put John to death.

The true remedy for this evil is the practice of close and diligent and daily self-examination; and the habit, not merely of reading the scriptures and hearing sermons, but of applying both, with fidelity, to our own circumstances. The words of a particular text are soon repeated: the propriety of the conduct it inculcates is easily acknowledged. But to examine its contents in detail, and to consider with attention, and with a view to ourselves, the temper and the practice which it enjoins, is a work of no small labour and self-denial. I trust, that none will think me presumptuous, if, with a view of lessening the difficulty, I should venture to propose a few questions which every individual may advantageously put to himself; and on his fair and honest re bly to which, as in the presence of God, ought to depend his judgment of his own state.

We acknowledge that man is a sinful and guilty creature, and that naturally his heart is "enmity against God." But are we conformably to this doctrine resisting that desire which we feel to be independent of God? and are we striving to bring every rebellious thought into subjection to the rules of his holy word? Do we feel that there is in ourselves an evil heart of unbelief which leads us to depart from God? and are we, therefore, afraid of loving other things better than God, of trusting to human support rather than to him, of honouring man more than God, and of valuing the world more than his favour? Is it our grief that we have hitherto served and obeyed God so imperfectly; and is it our serious wish and our sincere endeavour to honour him for the future, by setting him ever before our eyes, by making his will the rule of our actions, and his glory our end? What pains then are we taking to do this; and wherein do we show that we are in earnest about it? Unless we are daily and earnestly engaged in resisting and subduing that enmity against God, his law, government, and authority, which so much prevails in all by nature; what proof can we have of being right in our faith? Too many there are who, wholly selfish in their views and desires, seeking no farther to serve God than they think will be sufficient to prevent their incurring the dreadful effects of his displeasure. But are these true Christians? Certainly not. The object of the gospel is to teach us to strive against sin, to love God with all our heart, and soul, and strength, and to make his glory our aim in all that we do. This will readily be acknowledged. But let me ask, is it our unvarying endeavour to exercise that habitual regard to God which will influence us in all we say, do, or think? Does every thing bow in our esteem to the will and command of God? Do we adopt those principles and live that kind of life which we know God will approve; or is there nothing in either which we can alter for his sake? Do we labour to maintain in our minds a lively sense of his presence? Do we exercise a constant submission to his will, a constant dependence on his power, wisdom, and goodness? Are we habitually thanking him for the mercies we enjoy, ascribing them only to his free and unmerited grace in Christ Jesus; and are we striving by some more substantial proofs than words to testify our gratitude to him? In our troubles, do we look to him alone for deliverance, resigning ourselves to his holy will, and even bearing affliction cheerfully for his sake? Do we value him as our chief good, as the only proper object of our happiness; and do we prove that we do so by preferring no gratification to his favour, by making every requisite sacrifice, and renouncing every evil habit, readily, for his sake? In short, do we set him before us as the witness of our actions, the judge of our conduct, the end of all that we do?

But let me now request my readers to take another view of the subject. They acknowledge, I doubt not, that this is a sinful world, and that therefore a Christian is not to be of the world even as Christ is not of the world, but is to make it his study to “mortify his members which are upon the earth, fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry; for the which thing’s sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience.” Now allow me to inquire, do we really believe this doctrine? Let us bring the matter to a point with our consciences. Are we renouncing the spirit of that world, whose friendship is represented as enmity against God? Are we crucifying the flesh with its affections and lusts? Are we engaged in a secret warfare with all our evil inclinations, and labouring to bring them into subjection, that our hearts may be as a temple sacred only to Christ? If this is the case, how do we show it? Are we daily examining ourselves? With what perverse dispositions are we maintaining this struggle? Are we as much and as earnestly engaged in subduing ourselves, as in pursuing honour, wealth, or worldly comfort? In what do we deny ourselves? I ask not what open and public sacrifices we are making—vanity may prompt to these: nor whether we are imposing penances on ourselves—that is comparatively an easy task. But are we mortifying our vanity, curbing our pride, subduing our self-will, renouncing our love of consequence and power, giving up our own pleasure; and especially are we resisting our besetting sin? Many of the commandments of God, let it be remembered, it is both easy and creditable to fulfil. Herod himself seems to have executed these. But he would not give up the gratification of a criminal passion from regard to those doctrines of which he acknowledged, generally, the truth.

The due reception of the gospel farther implies the attainment of a meek and quiet spirit. Do we then control our anger? Is the power of religion clearly visible in the restraint which we put upon those ebullitions of passion, and expressions of peevishness, which would otherwise break forth? Can we govern ourselves under provocation? If others are angry with us, are we calm with them? But perhaps some one may say, "My passion is soon over." Yes, this is natural to you: but why was it not restrained by religion? "But has religion," it may be asked, "any thing to do with our petty quarrels and resentments, which are soon excited and soon allayed?" Yes, for religion consists in restraining these from a regard to God, and reverence to his law. True religion is an habitual restraint on every evil temper: a powerful principle which keeps under and subdues every other which stands opposed to it. It is a principle derived from God, and it should be exercised in the resemblance of him who was meek and lowly in heart, and who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered, threatened not.

Then as to covetousness: are our desires of worldly things moderate? Are we contented with our present station, or are we impatiently striving to be delivered from its difficulties? Are we apt to be cast down when we meet with disappointment, and easily elated by worldly success? Are we making the wealth or the happiness of this world our principal objects: or are these wholly subordinate to religion? In a word, are we more anxious to possess the favour of God and his peace in our souls, than to possess any earthly treasures? Religion, it is true, does not require that we should relax in the just and proper duties of our calling, or be less diligent, industrious, and frugal than others; but then, if we are living as men whose conversation is in heaven, and whose hearts are chiefly set on things above, we shall pursue our business with far less eagerness than others do: we shall be far more anxious that our children should be holy than that they should be rich. Our children themselves should be able to perceive that it would make us more happy to see them religious than accomplished or rich.

I would further ask, what it is from which we derive our pleasures? Knowing how impure and polluting many of the sources of earthly pleasure are, and how apt to draw away our hearts from God; are we so indifferent to them, as to renounce them entirely whenever the interests of our souls require it? Are our pleasures derived from other and purer sources, sources pointed out and sanctioned by the law of God, which in this, as in every other particular ought to be our guide and director? Do we consider eating and drinking as principal sources of gratification; or do we regard them in their true light, as necessary indeed to the support of our bodies, but at the same time as liable to become instruments of temptation, and hindrances to a holy and spiritual life, and therefore requiring to be regulated by the rules of strict temperance?

Thus also are we to guard against the inordinate love of an earthly object. We are to beware lest we should love even a wife, a husband, or a child, to such a degree, as to forget that God requires the chief place in our affections. In short, we must be habitually employed, would we really be Christians, in watching over and subduing every evil propensity; so that all the thoughts of our hearts may be brought into subjection to the will of God. To hear the gospel preached, to acknowledge its truth, to enjoy a measure of its comforts, is but a small thing. The essential business of religion consists much more in the secret warfare which I have described; in carrying our knowledge into practice, and regulating by it our daily conduct.

There is a class of duties which still remains to be noticed, I mean the duties of justice between man and man. The law of God with respect to these is, that we should do unto others as we would they should do unto us; nay more, that we should seek our neighbour's welfare as truly as our own, and some points even in preference to our own. Now how are we acting in this respect? We acknowledge the rule: are we following it? Can we withstand the temptation of profiting by the ignorance or carelessness of our neighbour? Shall we be able to say at the day of judgment, "it has been my rule in life to take no advantage of another?" There will be daily occasions of exercising the principle of true righteousness, if we are influenced by it. It will lead us to judge favourably of our neighbour's actions, and to defend him when unjustly accused; to rejoice in his prosperity, to sympathise in his distress, to supply his wants as far as we are able; and, above all, it will teach us to promote the welfare of his soul. There is nothing, perhaps, in which men are apt so much to pride themselves as in the discharge of their duty to their neighbour; and yet when tried by the word of God, there is nothing in which they are generally more deficient.

If any one of my readers should object to this paper as legal, and as manifesting an ignorance of the grace of the gospel, I would entreat him to peruse the second chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to Titus. "Speak thou," says the venerable apostle, "the things which become sound doctrine." But what were the things becoming sound doctrine respecting which Titus was instructed to preach? They were the distinct and particular duties of aged men and aged women, of young women and young men, of servants and subjects. We see then how practical the preaching of Titus was required to be, and how particular also; not merely dwelling in generals, as too many are apt to do, and recommending holiness in a loose and vague way; but entering into the detail of the tempers which his hearers ought to possess, of the duties which they ought to practise, of the sins they ought to avoid: bringing religion home to their families and extending its influence to the ordinary business of life: regulating their whole conduct in such a manner as to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, and to command the admiration even of heathens. And to confirm this view of the matter, the apostle states it to be the very design of the gospel to produce in all men such a conduct as he had recommended. For the grace of God hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly in the government of our appetites and passions; righteously in the due discharge of the duties we owe to our neighbour; and godly in the conscientious fulfilment of the duties we owe to God: and that we should be ever looking forward, as the object of all our expectations and hopes, to the second coming of Jesus Christ, our God and Saviour.

THE PRACTICAL INFLUENCE

OF

F A I T H.

THE use and importance of faith, as it respects a sinner's justification before God, has been often largely insisted on; but it is likewise of great use and importance in the daily concerns of life. It gives evidence and subsistence to things not seen, and realizes the great truths of the gospel, so that they become abiding and living principles of support and direction while we are passing through this wilderness. Thus it is as the eye and the hand, without which we cannot take one step with certainty, or attempt any service with success. It is to be wished that this practical exercise of faith were duly attended to by all who profess to be followers of Christ. We should not then meet with so many cases that put us to a stand, and leave us at a great difficulty to reconcile what we see in some of whom we would willingly hope well, with what we read in scripture of the inseparable concomitants of a true and lively faith. For how can we but be staggered, when we hear persons speaking the language of assurance, that they know their acceptance with God, through Christ, and have not the least doubt of their interest in all the promises; while at the same time, we see them under the influence of unsanctified tempers, of a proud, passionate, positive, worldly, selfish, or churlish carriage?

It is not only plain, from the general tenour of scripture, that a covetous, a proud, or a censorious spirit, is no more consistent with the spirit of the gospel than drunkenness or whoredom; but there are many express texts directly pointed against the evils which too often are found amongst professors. Thus the apostle James assures us, "If any man seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, his religion is vain;" and the apostle John, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him;" and he seems to apply this character to any man, whatever his profession or pretences may be, "who, having this world's goods, and seeing his brother have need, shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him." Surely these texts more than intimate, that the faith which justifies the soul does likewise receive from Jesus grace for grace, whereby the heart is purified, and the conversation regulated as becomes the gospel of Christ.

There are too many who would have the ministry of the gospel restrained to the privileges of believers; and when the fruits of faith, and the tempers of the mind, which should be manifest in those who have "tasted that the Lord is gracious," are inculcated, think they sufficiently evade all that is said, by calling it legal preaching. I would be no advocate for legal preaching: but we must not be deterred by the fear of a hard word, from declaring the whole counsel of God; and we have the authority and example of St. Paul, who was a champion of the doctrines of free grace, to animate us in exhorting professors to "walk worthy of God, who has called them to his kingdom and glory." And indeed the expression a believer's privilege is often misunderstood. It is a believer's privilege to walk with God in the exercise of faith, and, by the power of his spirit, to mortify the whole body of sin; to gain a growing victory over the world and self, and to make daily advances in conformity to the mind that was in Christ. Nothing that we profess to know, believe, or hope for, deserves the name of a privilege, farther than we are influenced by it to die unto sin, and live unto righteousness. Whoever is possessed of true faith, will not confine his inquiries to the single point of his acceptance with God, or be satisfied with the distant hope of heaven hereafter. He will be likewise solicitous how he may glorify God in the world, and enjoy such foretastes of heaven as are attainable while he is yet upon earth.

When our Lord was upon earth, and conversed with his disciples, their eyes and hearts were fixed upon him. In danger he was their Defender; their Guide when in perplexity; and to him they looked for the solution of all their doubts, and the supply of all their wants. He is now withdrawn from our eyes; but faith sets him still before us, for the same purposes, and according to its degree, with the same effects, as if we actually saw him. His spiritual presence apprehended by faith, is a restraint from evil, an encouragement to every service, and affords a present refuge and help in every time of trouble. To this is owing the delight a believer takes in ordinances, because there he meets his Lord; and to this likewise it is owing that his religion is not confined to public occasions; but he is the same person in secret as he appears to be in the public assembly; for he worships him who sees in secret; and dares appeal to his all-seeing eye for the sincerity of his desires and intentions. By faith he is enabled to use prosperity with moderation; and knows and feels, that what the world calls good is of small value, unless it is accompanied with the presence and blessing of Him whom his soul loveth. And his faith upholds him under all trials, by assuring him that every dispensation is under the direction of his Lord; that chastisements are a token of his love; that the season, measure, and continuance of his sufferings are appointed by infinite wisdom, and designed to work for his everlasting good; and that grace and strength shall be afforded him, according to his day. Thus, his heart being fixed, trusting in the Lord, to whom he has committed all his concerns, and knowing that his best interests are safe, he is not greatly afraid of evil tidings, but enjoys a stable peace in the midst of a changing world.

By the same principle of faith a believer's conduct is regulated towards his fellow-creatures; and in the discharge of the several duties and relations of life, his great aim is to please God, and to let his light shine in the world. He believes and feels his own weakness and unworthiness, and lives upon the grace and pardoning love of his Lord. This gives him an habitual tenderness and gentleness of spirit. Humbled under a sense of much forgiveness to himself, he finds it easy to forgive others, if he has aught against any. A due sense of what he is in the sight of the Lord preserves him from giving way to anger, positiveness, and resentment: He is not easily provoked, but is "swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath;" and, if offended, easy to be entreated, and disposed, not only to yield to a reconciliation, but to seek it. As Jesus is his life, and righteousness, and strength, so he is his pattern. By faith he derives from him a benevolent spirit, and, according to his sphere and ability, he endeavours to promote the welfare of all around him. The law of love being thus written in his heart, and his soul set at liberty from the low and narrow dictates of a selfish spirit, his language will be truth, and his dealings equity. His promise may be depended on, without the interposition of oath, bond, or witness; and the feelings of his own heart, under the direction of an enlightened conscience, and the precepts of scripture, prompt him "to do unto others as he would desire they, in the like circumstances, should do unto him." If he is a master, he is gentle and compassionate; if a servant, he is faithful and obedient; for in either relation he acts by faith, under the eye of his Master in heaven. If he is a trader, he neither dares nor wishes to take advantage, either of the ignorance or the necessities of those with whom he deals. And the same principle of love influences his whole conversation. A sense of his own infirmities makes him candid to those of others. He will not readily believe reports to their prejudice, without sufficient proof: and even then he will not repeat them, unless he is lawfully called to it. He believes that the precept, "Speak evil of no man," is founded upon the same authority with those which forbid committing adultery or murder; and therefore he "keeps his tongue as with a bridle."

Lastly, Faith is of daily use as a preservative from a compliance with the corrupt customs and maxims of the world. The believer, though in the world, is not of it: by faith he triumphs over its smiles and enticements, he sees that all that is in the world, suited to gratify the desires of the flesh or the eye, is to be avoided, not only as sinful, but as incompatible with his best pleasures. He will mix with the world so far as is necessary, in the discharge of the duties of that station of life in which the providence of God has placed him, but no farther.

THE
SCRIPTURE GUIDE

TO

BAPTISM:

CONTAINING

A FAITHFUL CITATION OF ALL THE PASSAGES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT WHICH RELATE TO THIS ORDINANCE,

WITH

EXPLANATORY OBSERVATIONS;

AND ATTENDED BY

NUMEROUS EXTRACTS FROM EMINENT WRITERS.

With an Appendix.

BY R. PENGILLY.

FROM THE NINTH LONDON EDITION, REVISED AND IMPROVED BY THE AUTHOR.

These were more noble than those in Thessalonica. in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and SEARCHED THE SCRIPTURES daily, whether those things were so.—Acts xvii. 11.

Whatever pretends to exceed the direction of the Word may safely be rejected, cannot safely be admitted.—DR. OWEN.

INTRODUCTION

SCIENTIFIC GUIDE

The first part of the book is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind.

It is the work of our hands, the brain of our mind, the soul of the body that the spirit is of a higher nature than that of the body. It is the work of our hands, the brain of our mind, the soul of the body that the spirit is of a higher nature than that of the body. It is the work of our hands, the brain of our mind, the soul of the body that the spirit is of a higher nature than that of the body.

The second part of the book is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind.

The third part of the book is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind.

The fourth part of the book is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind. It is divided into two main parts, the first of which is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the science of the mind.

INTRODUCTION.

I do not know that I can better introduce the following pamphlet to the reader than by stating the origin of it; its reference to my own case and circumstances, he will kindly excuse.

From my earliest childhood, I was taught to say, that, "in my baptism,—I was made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven."* My instructors would readily admit, and in effect taught, the following sentiments, lately given to the world by different writers:—

One affirms—"With the water of our baptism, the grace of regeneration, the seed of the Holy Ghost, the principle of a higher existence is committed to the soul; it grows with us as an innate impression of our being. . . . As long as the believer trusts to his baptism as the source of spiritual life, all is well."†

Another adds—"On a topic so interesting, I might have well enlarged. I might have told you that only by baptism we are admitted into Christ's flock on earth; by baptism we are adopted into his covenant, incorporated into his church. . . . that in baptism all our sins are pardoned, and the Holy Ghost bestowed."‡ And another—"Baptism brings its privileges along with it—is a seal of the covenant—does not lose its end through the indisposition of the receiver."§

These sentiments, as far as I received them, were very gratifying. I seem to have been put, by the kindness of my parents and sponsors, into a situation of unspeakable advantages, and, above all, my heaven was secured, and I had nothing to fear in life or death.

Being, however, afterward brought under a faithful ministry, I observed a most ASTONISHING DIFFERENCE between the statements of the pulpit and the sentiments I had been taught in childhood, as given above. Here I was taught 'that all mankind were by nature sinners, depraved, and guilty,—that unless they be brought to repent of sin, to believe in Christ, to seek and find mercy from God through the Saviour, they must inevitably perish!'—As to what was done for me in infancy, I was assured it profited me nothing. My excellent minister would not hesitate to appeal to his congregation, in the inquiries which recently appeared in a public paper:—

"Is not the sponsorial part of the baptismal service a fragment of popery, without the shadow of a foundation in the Holy Scriptures?"

"Are not thousands of children, who show no signs whatever of spiritual regeneration, taught to repeat a DELIBERATE FALSEHOOD, from week to week, when, according to the instructions of their catechism, they declare that at baptism they were made 'members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven?'"

"Are not multitudes of young people brought to the rite of confirma-

* See the Church of England Catechism, and Baptism of Infants.

† Mr. W. HARNES, minister of St. Pancras' chapel, London, in a sermon on Baptismal Regeneration, pp. 135. 133.

‡ W. B. Knight, Perpetual Curate of Margam, and Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Llandaff, in a Letter on Baptism, p. 26.

§ In Adam Clark's Commentary, at the end of Mark.

tion, merely that they may renew the solemn farce which was performed by their sponsors at baptism; and that they might take a vow which they never intended to fulfil?"*

What these questions implied, and the preceding remarks expressed, appeared to me awfully serious; and the CONTRARIETY of sentiment which prevailed, and which the foregoing quotations exhibit, was exceedingly perplexing. My highest and best interest for time and eternity was here involved. On the one hand, I was told that by my baptism "all was well," and on the other, that the ordinance, as observed upon me, was a "solemn farce!"

What should I do in this case? Why this, I resolved, I would do: I would take a New Testament, and go through it, and mark down and distinguish in the margin, all those passages which related to baptism; and when I had done so, I would read them all over in succession, as one chapter, with care and attention; and as I knew this blessed book was the only original and divine authority on the subject, here, I inferred, I should learn correctly what this ordinance did for children—what was the office of sponsors—and how the ordinance sealed to me the blessing of the covenant.

To my surprise, the New Testament was ENTIRELY SILENT upon ALL these points! I could not find a single passage relating to the baptism of infants—nor one relating to sponsors—nor one about baptism bringing me into the covenant, or sealing to me its blessings! Every passage I could find, descriptive of the persons baptized, either by John or the disciples of Christ, represented them as persons grown up, instructed, and believing the gospel; nor could I find any passage relative to their bringing their children with them, or at any period to be baptized. I found, also, that all the commands and instructions given respecting baptism entirely related to its administration to believers, and not one included the duty of parents in securing, by this all-important ordinance, the spiritual and eternal well-being of their children!

Now, when I considered the unbounded benefits said to be consequent upon children's baptism, and the solemn manner in which I was required to repeat these statements in early life, as if they were the plainest subjects in Scripture, the reader may judge of my surprise in finding them entirely destitute of that sacred authority!

In the end, I was brought to believe that the institution was altered—that it was not now observed, where I was early instructed, as originally appointed of Christ. Yet to alter Christ's institutions appeared to me a VERY PRESUMING ACT: it was derogatory to the authority of Christ, and a reflection on his wisdom; and as I remembered how God manifested his displeasure against any alteration of what he had appointed, under the Old Testament, so I inferred he must be equally displeased with any alteration of the New Testament ordinances. A passage I met with in MATTHEW HENRY'S Exposition, respecting the conduct and awful fate of Aaron's sons in taking common fire, instead of fire from the altar, to burn incense, I deemed very impressive, and quite appropriate to this subject:—

* In "THE RECORD," (a paper in the Church of England interest,) for November 30, 1829, headed, 'Questions for the Consideration of the Ecclesiastical Authorities of the Realm.' See also Mr. HYATT, cited at p. 63.

“Not being holy fire, it is called strange fire; and, though not expressly forbidden, it was crime enough that God ‘commanded it not.’ For, (as Bishop HALL well observes here,) ‘It is a dangerous thing, in the service of God, to decline from his own institutions; we have to do with a God who is WISE to prescribe his own worship, JUST to require what he has prescribed, and POWERFUL to revenge what he has not prescribed.’ Now that the laws concerning sacrifices were newly made, lest any should be tempted to think lightly of them, because they descended to many circumstances which seemed very minute, these that were the first transgressors were thus punished for a WARNING to others, and to show how jealous God is in the matters of his worship. Being a holy God and sovereign Lord, he must always be worshipped exactly according to his own appointment; and if any jest with him, it is at their peril.”—On Lev. x.

My mind was considerably exercised upon this subject. ‘Not willingly,’ I was constrained to say, ‘would I jest with Christ’s ordinances, or would I support any alteration of his institution. If I knew his will, I would observe and keep it; for the time is coming when I must stand at his bar to give an account of the deeds done in the body; and if I was one of those who altered his ordinances, or countenanced such a daring presumption, I should have cause to anticipate his divine displeasure.’ With these impressions I came to the determination, that, at any risk, what the Scriptures taught on baptism I would endeavour to receive and hold,—that as CHRIST was to be my ONLY JUDGE at the last, so he should be my ONLY GUIDE upon this subject. His command to every disciple is, “follow me;” and to enable him to do so he added, “Search the Scriptures, for they are they that testify of me.” Here I saw the path of duty plainly marked out by the footsteps of my Saviour, and instructions of his word; and his unbounded love and his infinite dignity rendered obedience to him unspeakably solemn and delightful.

I resolved, also, to read whatever authors I could meet with upon this subject, and though I was soon brought to decide, and acted upon that decision, guided, I hope, by the word of God; yet for several years there was not an author that fell in my way, whether treating of the subjects of baptism, or the mode of it, or the spiritual intention of the ordinance, but I felt disposed to examine his arguments. Nothing surprised me more than the strange diversity and opposition of sentiment which I observed between different very eminent writers. What one labored to establish, another as zealously exploded; and I am thoroughly convinced that the ONLY WAY for an inquiring mind to obtain solid satisfaction upon the subject is to lay aside all preconceived sentiments and prejudices, and to come, with a teachable spirit, to the fountain-head of information,—to take the New Testament and to go through it, allowing one passage to assist in the understanding of another, and here, on Heaven’s authority, to form his opinions, and to come to a decision.

But those portions of Scripture which relate to this ordinance are interspersed throughout almost the whole of the New Testament, and for the use of an INQUIRER upon this subject, a TRACT, containing a COMPLETE COLLECTION of all those passages, appeared to me exceedingly desirable. Being called, by the grace of Christ, to the all-important work of the ministry in the body of Christians, with which, from con-scientific principles, upon giving up my early views in favor of infant baptism, I became united, I felt the want of such a pamphlet when referring inquirers to the divine and infallible source of information. Not finding such a work in existence, I resolved to prepare it. My first effort was well received; and I afterwards enlarged it, by subjoining to each section of Scripture a few explanatory observations, and supported the sense I had given by extracts from the works of eminent pædobaptist writers. This work is now before the reader, and the following is its arrangement.

PLAN AND CONTENTS.

THE various portions of Scripture relating to baptism, I have here arranged as Three Chapters.

CHAP. I. The several passages in the Four Gospels, divided into VII sections, as they occur; page 9 to 27.

CHAP. II. The several passages in the Acts of the Apostles, divided into IX sections, as so many successive instances of baptizing; p. 27 to 44.

CHAP. III. The several passages in the Epistles, divided into III sections, as they have special allusions; p. 45 to 52.

To these Scriptures and their illustration, I have subjoined an APPENDIX, containing a BRIEF EXAMINATION, I. Of the common Reasons and Arguments by which the Baptism of Infants is urged and defended, 52 to 70. II. Of the Evidence in favor of Immersion as the Mode, p. 71 to 80. III. Of the Design of the Great Head of the Church in the appointment of this ordinance, p. 80 to 81. And, finally, offering a few general CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS upon the subject, p. 81 to 86.

I am not conscious that I have written a single sentence, but as the dictate of sincere conviction; and, I hope, not one inconsistent with Christian candor. I love my brethren in the faith, notwithstanding upon this particular subject they may differ from me; and though I have seen no small portion of sarcastic wit brought into the controversy, I have not once borrowed from that treasury; my cause wanted not that auxiliary.

I take this opportunity of expressing the satisfaction I have felt in the kind recommendations which numerous ministers have given to this little work, not only in Britain, but in India, and especially in the United States of America, where it has gone through several large editions. But, most of all, my gratitude is due to the AUTHOR of all goodness, for the testimonies I have received that "the publication has been eminently useful to many of the disciples of Christ, in freeing their minds from the mists of error, engendered by the doctrines and commandments of men, and leading them into scriptural views of this important institution of the kingdom of heaven." (New Baptist Miscellany, for 1828, p. 109.) I hope the alterations and additions made in the present edition will render it still more acceptable and useful.

Newcastle upon Tyne, Jan. 1, 1836.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

PASSAGES IN THE FOUR GOSPELS.

	PAGE
SECT. 1. The Mission, Preaching, and Baptizing of John the Baptist, - - - - -	9
Of the Mode of John's Baptism, - - - - -	12
2. The Baptism of Jesus Christ, from the four Evangelists, - - - - -	16
Christ Baptizing, by his Disciples, in Judea, - - - - -	18
4. John's last Baptizing in Ænon, - - - - -	20
5. References of Jesus Christ to John, his Baptism and success, - - - - -	21
6. Christ represents his Sufferings under the figure of "a Baptism," - - - - -	22
7. The Commission which our Lord gave his Apostles about the Time of his Ascension into Heaven, containing the formal Institution of Christian Baptism, - - - - -	23
Conclusion of the Four Gospels, - - - - -	26

CHAPTER II.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

SECT. 1. The Baptism at the Feast of Pentecost, - - - - -	27
2. Philip Baptizing at Samaria, - - - - -	29
3. The Baptism of the Ethiopian Eunuch, - - - - -	31
Of the Mode of the Eunuch's Baptism, - - - - -	31
4. The Baptism of the Apostle Paul, - - - - -	33
5. The Baptism of Cornelius and his Friends, - - - - -	34
6. The Baptism of Lydia and her Household, - - - - -	36
7. The Baptism of the Philippian Jailer and Household, - - - - -	39
8. Paul Baptizing at Corinth, - - - - -	40
Reflection on the Baptism of Households, - - - - -	42
9. Certain Disciples at Ephesus baptized, - - - - -	43
Conclusion of the Acts, - - - - -	44

CHAPTER III.

THE EPISTLES.

	PAGE
SECT. 1. Passages which contain an express Allusion to the Mode and Spiritual Design of Baptism,	45
2. Occasional mention of Baptism, - .	48
3. Baptism illustrated by Events recorded in the Old Testament, - - - . - -	49
Conclusion of the New Testament, - -	51

APPENDIX, PART I.

On the Grounds of infant Baptism, its Rise and supposed Benefits, - - - -	52
---	----

APPENDIX, PART II.

On the Scriptural Mode of Baptism. - -	71
--	----

APPENDIX, PART III.

On the Spiritual Design of Baptism, - -	80
Concluding Observations, - - - -	81
Objections to exclusive Believers' Baptism,	81
Reasons for the Baptism of Believers only,	85
Final Address to the Reader, - - - -	85

SCRIPTURE GUIDE TO BAPTISM,

&c. &c.

CHAPTER I.

PASSAGES IN THE FOUR GOSPELS.

§ I. The Mission, Preaching, and Baptizing of John the Baptist.

THE first place of Scripture, where the ordinance of baptism is found, is in the account given of the ministry of John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ. The surname of "Baptist" was most probably given him because he was "sent to baptize" by Divine authority, and was the first so authorized and employed. As all the four evangelists have given some account of John, I shall unite the testimony of the four, and present it to the reader in a continued relation.

Mark i. 1. THE beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. John i. 6, 7.

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John: the same came to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe. Matt. iii. 3. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

Luke i. 16, 17. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God: And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. iii. 1, 2. Now—the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness.

Matt. iii. 1. In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea; Luke iii. 3. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; Matt. iii. 2. And saying, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Acts xiii. 24. John preached the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel; xix. 4, saying unto the people, that they should believe on HIM which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

John i. 19 to 31. And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites to ask him, Who art thou? He confessed, I am not the Christ. I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord. And they asked him, Why baptizest thou, if thou be not that Christ? John answered, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you—who, coming after me, is preferred before me. That HE should be manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water. 33. [For God] sent me to baptize with water.

Matt. iii. 5. Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, 6. And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

Mark i. 4. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; 5. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.

Luke iii. 12. Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do? 13. And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

Matt. iii. 7. But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? 8. Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance: 9. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. 11. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire: 12. Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

CHRISTIAN READER: There are THREE INQUIRIES, in relation to the ordinance of baptism, upon which, I shall imagine, you are desirous of obtaining satisfaction of mind, purely deduced from the Scriptures; namely,—

I. Who are proper subjects of Christian baptism, according to the authority of Christ, and the practice of his harbinger and apostles?

II. By what mode should the ordinance be administered, according to the same authority and practice?

III. What is the spiritual design of baptism, and in whom is that design realized ?

These three inquiries will be kept constantly in view in the following pages. In the foregoing section of Scriptures you have a full account of John the Baptist, with reference to his practice, in which you may notice,—

1. His mission was divine. He was “sent from God.” He was raised up by the special purpose and power of God, and employed in a work entirely his own; succeeding to no one who had gone before him, and followed by no one in the same office. His instructions for his work he obtained by Divine revelation:—“The word of God came unto John,” and thus his entire work was of God’s immediate appointment.

2. The great object of his ministry was to “prepare the way of the Lord;” i. e. of Christ, who was immediately to follow him, according to the prediction of the prophets; Isa. xl. 3. Mal. iii. 1. This great design John was to accomplish, 1. By proclaiming repentance—impressing on the minds of his hearers their guilt before God; the necessity of being sensible of it, and confessing it; and thus, with contrition of heart, “to turn to the Lord their God.” 2. By announcing the immediate approach of the long-promised MESSIAH; assuring the Jews that his “kingdom was at hand;” and, 3. By seriously charging and exhorting them to “Believe on him who should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.” By these labors, attended with the blessing of heaven, he was “to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.” And this was happily accomplished, inasmuch as the first disciples of Christ were previously disciples of John. John i. 35—47.

It does not appear, therefore, that the design of John’s mission could be realized in any but in adult persons, or persons come to the years of understanding; none else could repent of sin; none else could embrace the glad tidings of the coming Saviour, and thereby be “a people prepared” for the service of Christ; who, within one year, was to follow John, and receive the people so prepared.

3. His ministry was to be followed by the administration of the ordinance of baptism. His commission from heaven included this ordinance. Baptism, as a divine institution, was unknown in the church of God previous to the mission of John. But he informed his hearers, that the same God who sent him to prepare the way of the Lord, “sent him to baptize with water,” John i. 33, and this too was preparatory to the ministry of Christ, as it was fitted and intended to teach the guilt of sin, and the penitent sinner’s purification in the way which the gospel of Christ should bring more fully to light. Of that blessed work of purification baptism was an appropriate and impressive EMBLEM. In accordance with these remarks,* we have the excellent

* In this work I shall introduce numerous extracts from the writings of eminent Pædobaptist authors, who, though they practised differently from what is contended for in these pages; yet, some upon one part of our inquiry, and some upon others, have fully granted and allowed the Divine authority of what I shall endeavour to point out as having that authority, to the attention of the reader. As, however, I

MATTHEW HENRY. "Baptism with water made way for the manifesting of Christ, as it supposed our corruption and filthiness, and signified our cleansing by him, who is the Fountain opened." Of John's express commission from heaven for baptizing, Mr. Henry adds, "See what sure grounds John went upon in his ministry and baptism. He did not run without sending; God sent him to baptize. He had a warrant from heaven for what he did. . . God gave him both his mission and his message; both his credentials and instructions." Expos. on John i. 6—14, and 29—36.

4. The persons John baptized had received his ministry, and were professed penitents. One particular circumstance is expressly asserted by Matthew, and repeated again by Mark, descriptive of the persons whom John baptized, and by the latter it is asserted of "all" of them; namely, that they CONFESSED THEIR SINS. He had preached repentance—exhorted to repentance—and of the Pharisees and Sadducees demanded the "fruits of repentance;" while he peremptorily rejected every plea they might urge, particularly that, in which they generally gloried, that they were the children of Abraham; and hence in accordance with that repentance which John thus preached and demanded, "they were all baptized of him, confessing their sins." Thus his baptism is expressly called by Mark i. 4, by Luke iii. 3, and twice by Paul, Acts xiii. 24, and xix. 4, "the baptism of repentance." This being admitted, it will follow, that the persons, yea all the persons, whom John baptized, WERE THOSE WHO HAD RECEIVED AND BELIEVED HIS MINISTRY; and, as the "fruit" of their conviction, they openly professed repentance toward God, and faith in the approaching Saviour. Thus,

MR. ERSKINE. "John's baptism was termed the baptism of repentance, and baptism to repentance; because he required of ALL, whom he admitted to baptism, a profession of repentance, and exhorted them to such a conduct as would demonstrate their repentance genuine." In Booth's Pædobap. Exam. Vol. II. p. 241. Ed. 2.

MR. SCOTT. "It does not appear that any but adults were baptized by John . . . adult Jews, professing repentance and a disposition to become the Messiah's subjects, were the ONLY PERSONS whom John admitted to baptism." Comment. on Matt. iii. 5, 6.

MR. BURKITT. "John's baptism was the baptism of repentance, of which infants were incapable." Expos. Notes on Matt. xix. 13—15

OF THE MODE OF JOHN'S BAPTISM.

MY reader will, no doubt, be aware that the ordinance of baptism is administered THREE different ways, in different countries, and by different bodies of Christians; namely, by DIPPING—POURING—and shall make my work as brief as possible, these extracts must necessarily be short, but care shall be taken to give the real meaning of every writer in the passages cited. Their brevity can form no objection; or the same objection might be made against passages cited by the apostles in the New Testament.

SPRINKLING. He will also be aware, that in whatever way the water be employed, it cannot take away sin. No spiritual benefit can be conveyed by any one mode more than by another; but, notwithstanding this, it is a serious and interesting question, which of these has DIVINE AUTHORITY? How did the harbinger of Christ, having God's command upon the subject, administer the ordinance? By which of these modes was JESUS baptized? and his disciples by his sanction? There can be but ONE mode that has this DIVINE AUTHORITY; a deviation from this, is a deviation from the revealed will of God, and can be nothing better than a mere human invention. What is that ONE authorized mode? Will the Scriptures afford an inquiring mind satisfaction on this subject? No doubt; they were intended for that purpose, on this as well as on every other subject, in which our obedience to God is required.

Turn then your eye, reader, from the diversified and often varying practices of men, to that unerring and unchangeable source of information, which, in these pages, we propose to examine. Two inquiries here suggest themselves:—

I. What does the word in the original language, employed by the Spirit of God to express this ordinance, signify? Does it express the action of dipping, pouring, or sprinkling?

II. What mode do the circumstances attending the ordinance most evidently favor?

I. To express the action by which this ordinance is to be administered, the word so chosen is βαπτίζω; which our translators have not rendered into English by a verb of our own language expressive of the same action, but adopted the original Greek word, which with us is to baptize. To obtain therefore the sense of this word, we will turn to a Lexicon, where the word in question is explained.* The following is from the excellent Greek and English Lexicon of DR. JOHN JONES, which gives the plain sense of words without refining or accommodating:—

“βαπτω, I dip;—I dye, stain.

βαπτίζω, I plunge; I plunge in water, dip, baptize; bury, overwhelm.

βαπτίζομαι, I am plunged; plunge myself in sorrow; submit to, suffer.

βαπτισμα, immersion, baptism; plunging in affliction.”

To the unlearned reader it may be proper to observe, that the first of these words is the theme or root of the three following, and gives the primary idea of all; the first sense of which is to dip. The second is the word chosen by inspiration, to express the action by which the ordinance is administered, to baptize, i. e. to plunge. The

* We might here call to our assistance lexicographers and other learned writers out of number; but I may with confidence affirm, that in citing one, we cite every competent authority on the subject; for, in the proper and primary sense of the word baptize, learned men of all classes and countries are agreed, as I shall show in the Appendix.

third is the same, in the passive form, used by our Lord respecting his sufferings, in Matt. xx. 22, 23, and Luke xii. 50. The last is the Scripture name of the ordinance, baptism; the first sense of which is immersion.

According to this authority, to baptize, is, to plunge, to plunge in water, to dip; and then, figuratively, to plunge or overwhelm, as in sorrow, suffering, or affliction; and also, that baptism is immersion. I refer my reader to the Appendix, at the end of this pamphlet, (Part II.) for a confirmation of the sense here given; and requesting him to associate this sense with the words baptize and baptism, when they occur in future sections of Scripture, in order to observe whether that sense harmonizes with other statements connected with the ordinance, we pass on to notice

II. What mode do the circumstances attending the ordinance, as now administered by John, most evidently favor?

1. We should notice the place where John administered this ordinance. It was "the river Jordan." If, in reference to the people of Jerusalem, a situation where water might be easily obtained for sprinkling or pouring was what John required, we read of our Lord at this place, directing the man that was born blind to go and "wash in the pool of Siloam;" so we read of the "pool called Bethesda," and "the brook Cedron;" all in or near Jerusalem, (and we read of others in the Old Testament); and, without doubt, at some of them the penitent Jews of that city and neighborhood might have received the ordinance, if such were the mode by which John administered it; and it cannot reasonably be imagined he would have required those persons to go the distance of several miles for the convenience of the river Jordan: more reasonable to suppose he would have baptized in every town and village where his ministry had its intended effect; and, especially, at or near the metropolis. This strongly favors the opinion, that IMMERSION was his mode. Thus,

MR. TOWERSON. "For what need would there have been of the Baptist's resorting to great confluxes of water,—were it not that the baptism—was to be performed by an immersion? A very little water, as we know it doth with us, sufficing for an effusion or sprinkling." In Booth's Pædobap. Exam. Vol. I. p. 209. Ed. 2.

2. It is moreover affirmed, that not only was the river Jordan chosen by John for his baptism, but Matthew states, the people "were baptized of him IN Jordan," and Mark adds, "IN the RIVER of Jordan." The idea of going INTO the water of a river for the purpose of baptizing IN it, by sprinkling on the face, or pouring on the head, is too absurd to be entertained.

3. John also states himself, "I indeed baptize you (ἐν ὕδατι) that is, IN water;" not "with water," as it is rendered in the English authorized version. The passage was translated in water, in some of the early versions of the New Testament into our language. It is in water in the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions; it is so rendered by Montanus, and recently, in our own country, by that pre-eminent scholar, G. Campbell, (Principal of Marischal College, Aberdeen,) whose judicious and, in my opinion, unanswerable note upon the place I will lay before my reader.

MR. CAMPBELL. "So inconsistent are the interpreters last mentioned [i. e. certain Protestant] that none of them have scrupled to render ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ, in Jordan; though nothing can be plainer than that, if there be any incongruity in the expression in water, this, in Jordan, must be equally incongruous. But they have seen that the preposition in could not be avoided there, without adopting a circumlocution—which would have made this deviation from the text too glaring. The word βυττιζέω, both in sacred authors and in classical, signifies to dip, to plunge, to immerse, and was rendered by Tertullian, the oldest of the Latin fathers, tingere; the term used for deying cloth, which was by immersion. It is always construed suitably to this meaning; thus it is, ἐν ἕδατι, ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ." (that is, in water, in the Jordan.) "But I should not lay much stress on the preposition ἐν, which, answering to the Hebrew (beth), may denote with, as well as in, DID NOT THE WHOLE PHRASEOLOGY, in regard to this ceremony, CONCUR IN EVINCING THE SAME THING. Accordingly, the baptized are said to arise, emerge, or ascend, ver. 16, and Acts viii. 39, from or out of the water. When, therefore, the Greek word [baptizo] is adopted, rather than translated into modern languages, the mode of construction ought to be preserved so far as may conduce to suggest its original import." Let the reader seriously consider what follows. "It is to be regretted that we have so much evidence that even good and learned men allow their judgments to be warped by the sentiments and customs of the sect which they prefer. The true partisan, of whatever denomination, ALWAYS INCLINES TO CORRECT THE DICTION OF THE SPIRIT BY THAT OF THE PARTY." Four Gospels, Note on Matt. iii. 11.

TERTULLIAN, who lived within a century after the apostle John, mentions expressly the people (quos Joannes in Jordane tinxit) "whom John dipped in Jordan." In Stennett's Answer to Russen, p. 144.

Would it not be absurd to render the passage "John baptized with the Jordan?" and if, of necessity, it must be "in the Jordan," then it undeniably follows, it must be "in water;" and baptism in water or in a river, wherever so observed throughout the world, is baptism by immersion. But I hope to satisfy any candid inquirer on this subject in the Appendix.

MR. HERVEY, when contending that ἐν signifies in, adds, "I can prove it to have been in peaceable possession of this signification for more than two thousand years." "Every one knows," he observes in another place, that with "is not the native, obvious, and literal meaning; rather a meaning swayed, influenced, moulded by the preceding or following word." Letters to Mr. Wesley, Let. X. and II.

LIGHTFOOT AND ADAM CLARKE. "That the baptism of John was by plunging the body (after the same manner as the washing unclean persons—was) seems to appear from those things which are related of him; namely, that he baptized in Jordan, that he baptized in Enon, because there was much water there," &c. In A. Clarke's Commentary, at the end of Mark

Inference. If, then, I am a sincere inquirer after the will of God, and disposed to gather that will from what God has been pleased to reveal in his word for that purpose, I am constrained, from the foregoing Scriptures, to draw the following inference, namely, 'that John baptized none but those who gave him satisfactory evidence of being conscious of their sin and guilt before God, and whom he exhorted to repent and to believe in Jesus; and as to the Mode, that he immersed them in water, in the Jordan.'

§ II. The Baptism of Jesus Christ, from the four Evangelists.

OUR Lord's baptism we next find immediately following the foregoing account of John. This place attaches to it infinite interest, by the infinite dignity of the Person baptized.

Matt. iii. 13. Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him. 14. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? 15. And Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him. Mark i. 9. [Thus] Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

Matt. iii. 16. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water. Mark i. 10. And—coming up out of the water, Luke iii. 21. and praying, the heaven was opened, 22, And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased. 23. And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age.

John i. 32. And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. 29. 36. And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world! 34. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God. 28. These things were done in Bethabara, where John was baptizing.

What, my pious reader, shall we say of the PERSON baptized in this case! What an honor is hereby attached to the ordinance, and consequently to all that duly follow the example of the Redeemer in it!

Let the man who slights and contemns this sacred institution, calling it "an useless, unmeaning ceremony, incapable of washing away sin, or of effecting any good," let him read these verses, and view the im- maculate SON OF GOD, who had "no sin" to wash away, proceeding from Galilee down to Jordan "to be baptized." Let him see the "Wisdom of God" entering the streams, and bowing beneath them,

"The emblem of his future grave!"

This, we should suppose, would induce a different sentiment of the ordinance, and silence every objection to the practice of it. And if a sight of CHRIST in Jordan had not that effect, let him hear and see the approbation of the FATHER and SPIRIT testified on this very occasion, and immediately upon his submission to this sacred rite. Never was an ordinance so honored! Here is a dignity given to it infinitely exceeding any of the rites of the Old Testament. Each PERSON of the sacred TRINITY is specially present, and each DIVINE PERSON gives it the testimony of his approbation! The blessed REDEEMER submits to be baptized; the FATHER, at the instant of his rising from the water, calls him his beloved Son, in whose conduct he was well pleased; and the DIVINE SPIRIT, at the same instant, descended upon him in a visible form! O, to have witnessed this scene, how overwhelming! Nothing, since the commencement of time, has equalled in sublimity and glory this wonderful event.

Four things are to be noticed in this place. 1. The Reason why Christ would be baptized; upon which, hear the celebrated and excellent WITSIUS. "Our Lord would be baptized, that he might conciliate authority to the baptism of John—that by his own example, he might commend and sanctify our baptism—that men might not be loath to come to the baptism of the Lord, seeing the Lord was not backward to come to the baptism of a servant—that, by his baptism, he might represent the future condition both of himself and his followers; first humble, then glorious; now mean and low, then glorious and exalted; that represented by IMMERSION, this by EMERSION—and, finally, to declare by his voluntary submission to baptism, that he would not delay the delivering up of himself to be immersed in the torrents of hell, yet with a certain faith and hope of emerging."—In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. page 147.

2. The Time chosen for fulfilling the promise of pouring forth the Spirit upon Christ. This is noticed and improved by the pious DODDRIDGE. "Jesus had no sin to wash away, yet he was baptized; and God owned that ordinance so far as to make it the season of pouring forth the Spirit upon him. And where can we expect this sacred effusion, but in a conscientious and humble attendance upon divine appointments?" Fam. Expos. Improv. of the place.

3. The Language of Christ, in answer to John; which is thus explained by an esteemed commentator:

MR. SCOTT. Thus it becometh us, &c. "We never find that Jesus spake of himself in the plural number; and it must therefore be allowed he meant John also, and ALL the servants of God, in a subordinate sense. It became Christ, as our surety and our example, perfectly to fulfil all righteousness; it becomes us to walk in all the commandments and ordinances of God, without exception, and to attend on every divine institution—as long as it continues in force. Thus far Christ's example is OBLIGATORY." Commentary on Matt. iii. 13—15.

4. The Circumstance immediately following his baptism, namely, his "coming up OUT OF the water," which evidently implies that he went down into it, (as is expressly said of Philip and the eunuch, Acts viii. 38;) a circumstance required in no mode of baptism but immersion, and hence we infer that Jesus was buried or immersed in the water. To this mode of baptism our blessed Saviour plainly alludes when referring to his overwhelming sufferings, in Luke xii. 50, which we shall come to presently.

CAMPBELL'S Translation. "Jesus, being baptized, no sooner rose out of the water than heaven was opened to him." Four Gospels, Matt. iii. 16.

DODDRIDGE'S. "And after Jesus was baptized as soon as he ascended out of the water, behold, the heavens were opened unto him." In loco.

MACKNIGHT. Jesus "submitted to be baptized, that is, buried under the water by John, and to be raised out of it again, as an emblem of his future death and resurrection." Apostol. Epis. Note on Rom. vi. 4.

BISHOP TAYLOR. "The custom of the ancient churches was not sprinkling, but immersion; in pursuance of the sense of the word in the commandment and the example of our blessed Saviour." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 199.

I never, my reader, can think of the baptism of this glorious and divine Person—the Son of God—the Lord from heaven—the righteous Judge of the last day—the Author of our salvation, and the Giver of eternal life, but with feelings of the deepest interest. We observe him here proceeding on his long journey, (for Nazareth was three days' journey from Jerusalem, and not less from Bethabara,) the object of which is, "to be baptized." We observe him admitting of no argument against his submission to that rite; and we ought never to forget how he associated his people, his followers, with himself, "thus it becometh us!" the servant as well as the LORD, the members as well as the HEAD, "to fulfil all" practical "righteousness;" all that God enjoins and requires. How strong is the obligation to realize what the Saviour here intended! Who will not concur in the pious decision of Mr. POLHILL? "the pattern of Christ and the Apostles is more to me than all the human wisdom in the world." Nor can any one deny me the following Inference. The Baptism of Jesus, as an Example, is fulfilled in the baptism of a Believer by Immersion, and in no other case.

§ III. Christ Baptizing, by his Disciples, in Judea.

THIS is the only mention of our Lord's baptizing, or of the disciples by his authority and direction, during his corporeal presence with them; and, consequently, it claims our very serious attention.

John iii. 22. After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them and baptized. 26. And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him. 27. John answered and said, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven. 30. He must increase, but I must decrease.

Chap. iv. 1. When, therefore, the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, 2. (Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,) 3. He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee.—x. 40. And [he] went away again beyond Jordan, into the place where John at first baptized;—42. And many believed on him there.

The import of this passage is simply this, “Jesus went into the land of Judea and baptized certain disciples,—many hearing of him, and remembering what John had preached concerning him, flocked to him, —and soon it was generally known and said, as the happy fruit of his labors, ‘That Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John;’ upon which the Saviour departed, and went into Galilee. He again, however, visited this interesting place, and many more believed on him there.”

The only thing to be noticed here, and it is certainly of some importance as to our first inquiry, is this, that Christ MADE disciples before he baptized them. He did not begin by baptizing, and afterwards instructing; but he first taught them his gospel, and they believing and embracing his word, are thereby “made his disciples;” and hence they are said to “come to him,” to conform to his commandments, and then, secondly, he baptized them. As this is all the Evangelists have recorded respecting Christ baptizing, through the whole of his ministry, this is, consequently, ALL in which the Practice of Christ is given for the guide of his people. What we are to understand by “disciples,” or “making disciples,” is thus described by

MR. OWEN. “By the disciples of Christ, I intend them, and them only, who profess faith in his person and doctrine, &c. This is the method of the gospel, that first men, by the preaching of it, be MADE DISCIPLES, or be brought unto faith in Christ, and then to be taught to do and observe whatever he commands.” In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 275, and 287.

MR. BAXTER. “A disciple and a Christian are all one.” Ibid. p. 288.

Our LORD, however, may be heard for himself, as to what is intended by his disciples: “Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.” Luke xiv. 27. Whatever, therefore, may be said in favor of infant baptism, it cannot be said, that either CHRIST’S Example or Practice affords it any support; and we shall presently come to his Command on the subject. But, in passing from noticing the Practice of Jesus, let me cite the words of one of the most eminent Pædobaptist Commentators on the Bible England has ever witnessed :—

MR. SCOTT. "The baptism of Jesus was, doubtless, of adults alone." Commentary, on John iii. 22—24.

§ IV. John's last Baptizing, in Ænon.

THE next passage we find on our subject, is contained in few words. It is, however, of powerful import relative to the MODE.

John iii. 23. And John also was baptizing in Ænon, near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came and were baptized.

Of the Persons here alluded to, as baptized by the Harbinger of the Redeemer, nothing is said descriptive of them, except that "they came" to John, as the penitent Jews had before done at Jordan, and, like them, "were baptized;" which fairly implies, that it was their own voluntary act thus to seek this holy rite; and if so, they must have been previously instructed.

But, in reference to our inquiry on the Mode of baptism, this passage is of great weight. We have here the REASON assigned, on account of which John chose the place where we now find him pursuing the object in which he is divinely employed. He is baptizing in Ænon, "because there was MUCH WATER there." No candid Christian, I think, can object to the following

Inference. If John chose a place for the purpose of baptizing, on account of one circumstance, necessary for that ordinance, namely, "because there was much water there," then his Mode of baptism required much water: But much water is not necessary for any Mode of baptism but Immersion, and hence, without doubt, that was his practice. The same inference was drawn, with as little doubt, by the illustrious Pædobaptists following :—

CALVIN. "From these words, John iii. 23, it may be inferred, that baptism was administered, by John and Christ, by plunging the whole body under water." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 194.

WHITBY. "Οτι ἰδὲτα πολλὰ ἢν ἐκε; Because there was much water there, in which their whole bodies might be dipped; for in this manner only was the Jewish baptism performed, by a descent into the water, Acts viii. 38, and an ascent out of it, ver. 39, and a burial in it. Rom. vi. 3, 4. Colos. ii. 12." Annot. on the place. See Lightfoot and A. Clarke, at p. 16.

My reader scarcely need be told, that those who practise sprinkling never go to rivers, or places of much water, to administer the ordinance; and, if they should do so, the great quantity of the water could not be assigned as the reason for choosing such places; because, in their Mode, a very small quantity only is required. Not much candor is necessary to admit the truth so plainly conveyed as in this passage.*

§ V. References of Jesus Christ to John, his Baptism, and Success.

As the passage in the preceding section contains the last record of John's baptizing, it appears proper to follow it by the testimony Jesus bore to his Harbinger and his labors.

Luke vii. 24. AND when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John. What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? 26. A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. Matt. xi. 10. For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. 11. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women, there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist. John v. 35. He was a burning and a shining light.

Mark xi. 29. And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one question. 30. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me. 31. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him? 32. But if we shall say, Of men: (all the people will stone us: Luke xx. 6,) they feared the people; for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed. 33. And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell.

Luke vii. 29. And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. 30. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.

Here observe, 1. The Redeemer, in the first of these passages, gives John a pre-eminence above all the servants of God, of the former dispensation; not excepting Abraham, Moses, or Isaiah. His revelations were more signal; his preaching of more vital importance, and his success greater. Thus was he more than a prophet.

* The answer that some have made that the words, "much water," should be "many waters," and refer to many shallow streams, is sufficiently answered by the learned Pædobaptist Expositor, who thus renders and explains the passage:—

DODDRIDGE. "John was also at that time baptizing at Ænon; and he particularly chose that place, because there was a great quantity of water there, which made it very convenient for his purpose." "Nothing, surely, can be more evident, than that [ὕδατα πολλὰ] many waters, signifies a large quantity of water, it being sometimes used for the Euphrates. Jer. li. 13. (Septuagint.) To which, I suppose, there may be an allusion, Rev. xvii. 1. Compare Ezek. xliii. 2, and Rev. i. 15; xiv. 2; xix. 6; where the voice of many waters does plainly signify the roaring of a high sea." Fum. Expos. Paraph., and Note on the Place.

2. From the question which the Redeemer proposed to the Jews, Whether the baptism of John was from heaven or of men? in order to convict them of their guilt in treating John's labors as they had done, it will evidently follow, that it was "From heaven." Had John's baptism been borrowed from Jewish proselyte baptism, it would have been of men, (for that is unknown in the word of God,) and then the question might have been answered without hesitation, and the design of our Lord, in that case, could not have been realized.

*3. The common people, who heard John's ministry, (the Saviour adds,) "justified God," i. e. approved of the Divine conduct in John's ministry and baptism; and this they evinced in "being baptized with the baptism of John;" while classes of higher religious repute, "the Pharisees and lawyers," in contempt of this messenger of God, and his message too, "rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." Here our Lord plainly indicates that the ordinance of Baptism was a part of "the counsel of God," i. e. his mind and will; and, as far as this rite is contemned, so far the counsel of God is "rejected;" and it is, emphatically, "against themselves" who thus oppose what God enjoins.

Inference. If John, who was but a man, is to be so highly regarded, and his baptism considered "the counsel of God;" so that neglect of it thus meets the marked disapprobation of our Redeemer;—how much more may the Divine indignation be expected on them who slight this sacred ordinance in that still more interesting form, in which we shall presently find it,—enjoined by HIM, whose name is written "KING of kings, and LORD of lords!" Surely I may add, "If they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from HIM that speaketh from heaven!" Heb. xii. 25.

§ VI. Christ represents his Sufferings under the Figure of "a Baptism."

Matt. xx. 22. BUT Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. 23. And he said unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

Luke xii. 50. BUT I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!

Our Lord, in these affecting and impressive passages, is referring to the greatness of his approaching sufferings,—and, by a metaphor, he calls them "a Baptism." An interesting question from hence arises in reference to our second inquiry, Does sprinkling a little water on the face, or being totally immersed and overwhelmed in a large quantity, most appropriately exhibit an image of the severity of the sufferings of Christ? The following extracts will, I have no doubt, contain my reader's opinion:—

DODDRIDGE thus paraphrases the places: "Are you able to drink of the bitter cup of which I am now about to drink so deep, and to be baptized with the baptism, and plunged into that sea of sufferings with which I am shortly to be baptized, and, as it were, overwhelmed for a time?" "I have, indeed, a most dreadful baptism to be baptized with; and I know that I shall be shortly bathed, as it were, in blood, and plunged in the most overwhelming distress." Fam. Expos. on the places.

WITSIUS. "Immersion into the water, is to be considered by us, as exhibiting that dreadful abyss of Divine justice, in which Christ, for our sins, was for a time, as it were, absorbed; as in David, his type. he complains, Psalm lxi. 2, I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me." Æcon. of the Cov. L. IV. C. xvi. § 26.

MR. JAMES HERVEY expresses himself, on this subject, with great energy. "He longed, (beneficent, blessed BEING!) he longed for the fatal hour. He severely rebuked one of his disciples who would have dissuaded him from going as a volunteer to the cross. He was even straitened, under a kind of holy uneasiness, till the dreadful work was accomplished; till he was baptized with the baptism of his sufferings, bathed in blood, and plunged in death!" Theron and Aspasio, Vol. II. Let. 7.

"SIR H. TRELAWNEY, under whose impressive ministry," says the late amiable Mr. Dore, of London, "my first religious feelings were invigorated, referring to those words of our Lord, exclaimed to this effect: 'Here, I must acknowledge, our Baptist brethren have the advantage: for our Redeemer's sufferings must not be compared to a few drops of water sprinkled on the face, for he was plunged into distress, and his soul was environed with sorrows.'" Sermons on Baptism, by J. Dore, p. 39.

Inference. If our Lord intended the ordinance of baptism to exhibit an image of the overwhelming sorrows of his soul, in the garden and on the cross, his intention is frustrated by the change of immersion into sprinkling! And if this be admitted, (and it cannot be denied,) what devout Christian can think of this change but with deep regret!

§ VII. THE COMMISSION

Which our Lord gave his Apostles about the time of his Ascension into Heaven, containing the formal Institution of Christian Baptism.

WE have already seen that Baptism, as a New Testament ordinance, was instituted of God, and enjoined upon John as the herald and precursor of Christ. It is evident, also, that John administered it upon an admitted or professed acknowledgment of faith "in him who was to come after him." Acts xix. 4. But after our Redeemer had come, and finished his work, an alteration was necessary in this particular circumstance. None on earth, but Jesus, could make that alteration; and he, as HEAD and LORD of the church, now does it; requiring it to be administered from this hour, "In the name of the FATHER, and of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST." This I consider as a RENEWED INSTITUTION of the same sacred rite, altered only in its reference to the coming of Christ to set up his kingdom. And, what adds greatly to the solemnity of it in this renewed form, our Lord delayed its institution till his last moments on earth, and then united it with his final parting and solemn charge, given by Matthew and Mark in the verses following.

Matt. xxviii. 16. Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. 18. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. 19. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: 20. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

Mark xvi. 15. And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. 16. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. 19. So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

How solemn and interesting was this occasion! The Redeemer had undergone the baptism of his sufferings, last described—he had been bathed in blood in the garden!—he had sunk into death on the cross under floods of wrath, due to mankind! But now he is risen triumphant, and is about to ascend to his glory.

He had appointed his disciples to meet him on a mountain of Galilee where he was to give them his last most solemn and important charge contained in the verses above. The interesting hour is come; we may be sure the disciples are eager to catch every word from their ascending Lord, and that he would give them his directions in the plainest language possible.

He begins by encouraging their sorrowful minds, with a view of his supreme power in heaven and earth—in heaven, to give them the Holy Spirit; to employ the angels in their behalf; and, finally, to bestow the kingdom of heaven upon them. So he had all power in earth, to gather his church out of all nations; to subdue or restrain his enemies, and to reign over and dwell with his people as Lord and King of Zion.

Hence the Saviour gives them the "COMMISSION" for preaching and baptizing, which you, my reader, cannot too attentively consider. If you conceive there is any obscurity in the one Evangelist, the other will explain him; and this explanation you will, no doubt, esteem preferable to ten thousand criticisms. By uniting the words of both, they may be thus disposed: "Go ye, therefore, into all the world: teach all nations, and preach the gospel to every creature: him that

“believeth baptize, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and he shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.”

Our great Legislator, who only has right to enact laws for his church, to whom we must submit, and who will have nothing taken away from, or added to his word, Rev. xxii. 19, has here described to his apostles the person to whom they are to administer this his ordinance, namely, the BELIEVER; the person who shall cordially believe the gospel which they shall preach. And if we allow him to have expressed his mind clearly and fully, he restricts the ordinance to the believer alone. He has given no direction to admit any other to it; and who will dare to speak where HE is silent? Who shall enlarge or extend the limits HE has prescribed? or, who will dare to go beyond, or attempt to remove, the boundaries HE has fixed and established? Surely the mind of a true disciple recoils at the thought! Let us now hear the remarks of some eminent Pædobaptist writers on these passages:—

Mr. ARCHIBALD HALL, Predecessor of Mr. Waugh, of London. “How grand and awful is that weighty preface to the institution of Christian baptism! Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. Who is that daring, insolent worm, that will presume to dispute the authority, or change the ordinances of HIM who is given to be head over all things to the church? The solemnity of this ordinance is complete; and all the purposes of its institution are secured by the authority and blessing of Christ. His laws are not subject to any of those imperfections which are attendants of the best contrived systems among men, and frequently need explanations, amendments, and corrections. It is most dangerous and presumptuous to add any ceremony, or to join any service, on any pretence, unto Heaven’s appointment.”* Gospel Worship, Vol. I. p. 325, 326.

SAURIN. “In the primitive church, instruction preceded baptism agreeable to the order of Jesus Christ, Go, teach all nations, baptizing them,” &c. In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 274.

MR. BAXTER has a very forcible passage on the same place. “Go, disciple me all nations, baptizing them. As for those who say they

* MR. SWEETON, of Cambridge, has given us a skeleton of a sermon on this Commission of Christ, in which he proposed to consider, “I. The authority he claimed. II. The commission he gave to his Apostles. 1. They were to teach all nations. 2. They were to baptize their converts in the name of the sacred Three.” Then, he adds, “But though they first taught adults, and then baptized them, THEY REVERSED THIS ORDER with respect to infants.”

On reading this last sentence, the inquirer with surprise might ask, Who reversed this order? The answer here is, the Apostles. Reversed what order? The answer is, the order of Jesus Christ; ‘first, to teach, and second, to baptize.’ Awful thought! that mortal worms should presume to alter the institutions of the Lord of glory; yea, to reverse the order HE ordains!

Here is a candid confession that the order of Jesus Christ is “reversed, with respect to infants.” A fact, alas! too plain to be denied.

With respect to the Apostles, however, the charge is not true. They never reversed any order or appointment of Christ. He enjoined upon them, in his last words, to “teach men to observe whatsoever he had commanded them;” and any adding or taking away, to say nothing of reversing, he solemnly prohibited. Rev. xxii. 18, 19. The order of Christ is reversed, but it was not till the Apostles and primitive Disciples were long in the dust; as I shall show in the Appendix.

are disciplined by baptizing, and not before baptizing, they speak not the sense of the text; nor that which is true or rational; else, why should one be baptized more than another?—This is not like some occasional historical mention of baptism; but it is the very commission of Christ to his apostles, for preaching and baptizing; and purposely expresseth their several works in their several places and order. Their first task is, by teaching, to make disciples, which are, by Mark, called believers. The second work is, to baptize them, whereto is annexed the promise of their salvation. The third work is, to teach them all other things which are afterwards to be learned in the school of Christ. [Observe what follows.] To contemn this order, is to renounce all rules of order; for where can we expect to find it, if not here? I profess, my conscience is fully satisfied from this text, that it is one sort of faith, even saving, that MUST GO BEFORE BAPTISM; and the profession whereof, the minister must expect." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 270. See also other authors below.*

CONCLUSION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

THE last Scriptures we cited, close the information which the Four Gospels afford us on the subject of Baptism. Before we pass to the subsequent books, I beg to remind the reader, that we have had before us the practice of John; and the Example, Practice, and Command of our Lord Jesus Christ. As yet, we have not met with a single passage or word, which can fairly be interpreted as indicating that any persons should receive this ordinance, or are proper subjects for it, but those who have been first taught the gospel, and who profess to believe it.

But I am most anxious to impress on the attention of an inquirer the words of Jesus in the Commission, which we have just read. Remember, reader, that this Jesus is to be our JUDGE at the last great and awful day; and that He will not judge us according to the opinions or practices of men, but according to his own word. Upon this command of our Saviour, I would, therefore, beg briefly to add, and leave to the reader's deliberate meditations:—

1. That we have here the enactment of the DIVINE LAW, in reference to Baptism: and this Law we find delivered in language the most solemn, and in circumstances the most interesting and affecting.

* JEROME, the most learned of all the Latin Fathers. "They first teach all the nations; then when they are taught, they baptize them with water; for it cannot be that the body should receive the sacrament of baptism, unless the soul has BEFORE received the true faith." In Gale's Reflections on Wall, p. 319.

POOLE'S CONTINUATORS: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. The Greek is, make disciples all nations; but that must be first by preaching and instructing them; and Mark expounds it, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; that is, to every reasonable creature capable of hearing and receiving it. I cannot be of their mind who think that persons may be baptized before they be taught: we want precedents of any such baptisms in Scripture." Annot. in loc.

CALVIN. "Because Christ requires teaching before baptizing, and will have believers ONLY admitted to baptism, baptism does not seem to be rightly administered, except faith precede." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 272.

2. That this Law of Jesus is not like human laws, which admit of alterations or amendments. None but Jesus has authority to alter: and, coming from the Fountain of heavenly Wisdom, who will presume to improve upon HIS appointment? And

3. This Law is as delightful to the mind of a Christian, as it is solemn. The words, "baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit," imply a public recognition of the glorious change which has taken place in the spiritual circumstances of true converts, in their having passed from the family of sin and Satan, into the family of the TRI-UNE GOD! A change, not of the ordinance, but of the power and grace of God.

We now pass on to the Acts of the Apostles. Here we have an historical relation of the labors of the Apostles, for above thirty years after the ascension of Christ; and here we shall find the baptism of many thousands of persons. If we have misunderstood the will of Christ on this subject, THE APOSTLES SURELY DID NOT, and their obedience to his command will correct our error; but if, on the contrary, we have rightly interpreted his will, their obedience will confirm our opinion.

CHAPTER II.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

"THE penman of this Scripture," the Assembly of Divines, in their argument to it, assures us, "was Luke the Evangelist, (as appears from the first words of it,) for the most part an eye-witness to the things he records, being constantly a fellow-laborer with Paul. His purpose," they add, "in writing this narrative was, as he intimates in his first preface, that the Church might have the certain knowledge of Christ, his gospel, and kingdom; that our faith might not be built on the uncertain reports of pretenders to truth." Hence, admitting the writer to be a faithful and pious historian, and writing purposely for the direction of the Church of Christ in all following ages; and, above all, under the influence of the Spirit of God, we may safely rely, not only on the accuracy of the accounts, but on the fulness and sufficiency of the information to answer the professed purpose.

We have here, on infallible record, NINE INSTANCES of the administration of baptism, which we will examine in their own order.

§ I. The Baptism at the Feast of Pentecost.

On this memorable occasion, which was but ten days from the ascension of Christ, when the Apostles and Disciples were together at Jerusalem, it pleased God to accomplish the promise of sending them the Holy Ghost. By his miraculous power they were enabled to speak in different languages to the multitude then assembled at Jerusalem from different nations: so that every one heard, in his own tongue, the wonderful works of God. Peter delivers to the multitude an impressive discourse, in which he charged the Jews with having crucified the Lord of glory; but added, that God had raised him from the dead, and exalted him to his right hand, as the only Lord and Christ. Upon this follow the verses relating to the ordinance, and descriptive of the subjects of it.

Acts ii. 37. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter, and to the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?
38. Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost: 39. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

41. Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. 42. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers; 47. Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

Here we must observe how the apostle Peter obeys his Lord's direction in the Commission. He begins by preaching, and never mentions a word about baptism, till he evidently found some of his hearers answering the character, "he that believeth." Hence, the persons who were baptized are thus described,—1. Their hearts were deeply penetrated by the truth they heard, so that they cried, What shall we do? 2. They are exhorted to repent of their sins. 3. They at length "GLADLY RECEIVED THE WORD," and thereon were baptized, and added to the church. 4. They afterward continued steadfast in the doctrine of the gospel, and in the practice of its duties. Not a word of this will apply to infants.

There is, however, one clause in the 39th verse of the above scriptures, "The promise is to you, and to your children," which is commonly urged in favor of infant baptism; as if the apostle alluded to some promise, on the ground of which, infant children were deemed proper subjects of Christian baptism. To answer which, let the three following things be considered:—

1. The promise, to which the apostle alludes, has no relation to infant children, it being the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost, joined with its effects, of which infants are incapable. My reader will observe that the people, on this occasion, were astonished at the effects produced by the gift of the Spirit. The apostle assures them, verses 16—18, that it was the fulfilment of the prophecy of Joel; which prophecy is thus expressed, chap. ii. 28: "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy," &c. The apostle having delivered an impressive discourse, observing his hearers deeply affected and amazed at the gifts of the Spirit, in order to turn their amazement into hope and joy, refers them a second time to this promise, and to their own interest in it, in the following words, ver. 38, 39, "Repent, &c. and you [yourselves] shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; FOR [by this I assure you of it] the promise is to you and to your children." Now, as the gift of the Spirit, with his miraculous powers, is the object of the promise, and, as infant children are incapable of that gift, children in infancy cannot be intended. Thus,

WHITBY. "These words will not prove a right of infants to receive baptism; the promise here being that only of the Holy Ghost, mentioned in verses 16, 17, 18, and so relating only to the times of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost, and to those persons who, by age, were capable of these extraordinary gifts." Annot. on the place.

DODDRIDGE. "The promise is to you and to your children. Considering that the gift of the Spirit had been mentioned just before, it seems most natural to interpret this as a reference to that passage in Joel, which had been so largely recited above, ver. 17, &c. where God promises the effusion of the Spirit, on their sons and their daughters." Fam. Expos. Note on the place.

2. The word, in the original, τεκνυ, rendered children, signifies posterity; and does not necessarily imply infancy.

HAMMOND. "If any have made use of that very unconvincing argument [referring to this passage, Acts ii. 39,] I have nothing to say in defence of them.—The word children there, is really the posterity of the Jews, and not peculiarly their infant children." Works, Vol. I. p. 490.

LIMBORCH, a learned divine of Amsterdam. "By τεκνυ the apostle understands, not infants, but posterity; in which signification the word occurs in many places of the New Testament; see, among others, John viii. 39. [If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.] Whence it appears, that the argument which is very commonly taken from this passage, for the baptism of infants, is of NO FORCE, and GOOD FOR NOTHING." Comment. in loc.

3. The words of the apostle immediately following, explain his own meaning in the most decisive terms: "The promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even TO AS MANY AS THE LORD OUR GOD SHALL CALL,"—'to as many of you and your children, and the Gentiles afar off, as God should call by his word and Spirit to this great privilege.'

MATTHEW HENRY. "To this general, the following limitation must refer, even as many of them, as many particular persons in each nation, as the Lord our God shall call effectually into the fellowship of Jesus Christ." Expos. of the place.

Inference. From the whole, it appears most evident, that none were, in this case, encouraged to hope for Christian baptism, but such as gave evidence of being called effectually by grace; and NONE WERE, IN FACT, baptized, but such as "gladly received the word." So far, the word of God is our plain guide.

§ II. Philip baptizing at Samaria.

Acts viii. 5. THEN Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. 6. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing, and seeing the miracles which he did. 8. And there was great joy in the city.

12. But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. 13. Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

In this instance, as in the former, the commission of Christ is literally fulfilled. Philip began his work by preaching Christ to them; and when they had heard the doctrines and saw the miracles, they were filled with joy. Not a word about baptizing, till some of the people "believed" the things concerning Jesus Christ; then "they were baptized, both men and women."

Now, if it were the will of Christ that infants should be baptized, and it were true that the Apostles, (like Pædobaptist Missionaries among the Heathen,*) were accustomed to baptize children together with the parents; then, if any of those "men and women" at Samaria had children, (which surely is highly probable,) Philip must have baptized them: but, had he baptized men, women, and children, is it to be imagined that the inspired historian, writing, (as he says,) "of ALL that Jesus began to do and to teach," and "having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first;" and his avowed design being that his reader "might know the certainty of things;" is it to be imagined that he would particularize the two, out of the three descriptions of the baptized, and omit the third? This I conceive impossible; and therefore draw this Inference. When the Evangelist states, "they were baptized, both men and women," had infants also been baptized, he must have added, to have completed the record of the circumstance, "and children;" but not making that natural and necessary addition, I infer, that men and women only were baptized; and that no infants received the ordinance with them; therefore, that the practice at that time did not exist.

* In the accounts we are often receiving from Pædobaptist Missionaries among the heathen, our brethren naturally inform us of the children, as well as the adults, they baptize. For example, in the "Missionary Register" for the year 1821, at page 19, a Report from South Africa, states—"During the year 1819, 20 adults and 21 children were baptized." At page 293, a Missionary in Western Africa, states—"September 3d, Sunday—I preached, &c. and then baptized 23 adults and 3 infants." Page 294, Nov. 29th,—“On the first Sunday of this month I baptized 34 adults and their children; 48 in all.”

Rev. C. Mant writes from Nagercoil, East Indies, in March, 1826: "Last month I baptized 5 adults and 4 children." Rev. C. Barff writes from Huahine, South-Sea Islands, June 5, 1825, "30 were added to the church during our visit, and a number baptized. Among those baptized were 16 infants."—Missionary Chronicle, for November, 1826.

Are not such accounts quite natural where infant baptism prevails? And why is there a perfect silence throughout the history of apostolical labors on this subject? Their practice surely was not the same.

§ III. The Baptism of the Ethiopian Eunuch.

THE eunuch described in this chapter was a person of high authority in the kingdom of Ethiopia, but it would seem a proselyte to the Jewish religion. He is here returning from Jerusalem. Philip is directed to meet him in his way. He found the eunuch reading, as he proceeded in his chariot, the prophet Isaiah, chap. liii. 7. "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter," &c. He is desirous that Philip should explain to him, Whether the prophet, in that place, spake of himself or of some other? and he took him up into his chariot for that purpose: upon which the Evangelist adds:

Acts viii. 35. Then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. 36. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? 37. And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered, and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. 38. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. 39. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, and the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

My reader will not need to be reminded of the Commission of his Redeemer, after perusing these verses. We have here a plain example of the practice of the apostles, before they admitted a person to baptism. Philip might have deemed the Eunuch, after having heard the gospel, a proper subject for baptism, by being directed from heaven to teach him,—he might have inferred it also, from his sincere request of it; yet he does not, he dares not, baptize him, until he openly profess to "believe with all his heart;" remembering, no doubt, that Christ had appointed the ordinance for such, and for such only. Nothing can demonstrate more clearly than this, that a DECLARATION OF FAITH WAS INDISPENSABLY REQUIRED PREVIOUS TO BAPTISM.*

OF THE MODE OF THE EUNUCH'S BAPTISM.

WE have, in this case, the circumstances attending the administration of baptism more minutely described than in any other instance recorded in the New Testament. The reader is requested to observe the following things:—

* * Those who contend, that servants and children were all baptized in those days, with, and on account of, their masters and parents, would find it difficult to support their hypothesis in this case. It is the greatest absurdity to suppose that Philip would admit the eunuch's servants to baptism, without any profession, or even instruction, when he would object to the pious master, after he requested it, unless he was able to give a frank and open profession of faith in Christ. But he baptized NONE but the eunuch; and, therefore, we may safely conclude, the apostles had "no such custom, neither the churches of God."

1. If sprinkling or pouring were the mode of baptism ordained by Christ, and practised by the apostles, we are assured, by the best authority, that travellers through those deserts "never omitted" to furnish themselves with vessels of water for their journeys; that this provision was "absolutely necessary;" and, if so, the eunuch had all that was required for the ordinance, without waiting till they came to a place of water. See Doddridge, as presently cited, and Shaw's Travels, as referred to by him.

2. We are here, however, informed, verse 36, that they proceeded on their journey till "they came" (επι, ad) "unto a certain water." And it appears that it was the sight of this place of water, that suggested to the eunuch his immediate submission to the ordinance. "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" How unmeaning would this be if he had the requisite water before!

3. If we admit that the eunuch was not previously provided with water, now when they were "come to a water," it would have been easy, and natural to be expected, for one of the attendants to have conveyed to him as much water as was required, without his, or Philip's, proceeding farther. But, though "he commanded the chariot to stand still," no command is given upon this point,—of bringing water to him. But,

4. Leaving the chariot, verse 38, "they went down INTO the water;" (εκ το υδατος, in aquam.) Here the reader will remark, It was not sufficient to come to the water, (which we are often told is all that the original means,) for this they had done before; but here is a second circumstance,—after they had come to it, they went down into it.

5. The inspired historian also adds, that it was not the eunuch alone that went into the water, but "they went down BOTH;" and this is repeated again, as if to make quibbling or doubting on this subject impossible, "both Philip and the eunuch." Such was the mode of baptism, as now established by the Son of God, that it could not, in this case, be administered unless Philip attended the eunuch into the water. And

6. While in this situation, both of them in the water and surrounded therewith, "he baptized him;" that is, if the word be translated, "he immersed him," in the name of the Tri-une Jehovah. For this solemn act, the circumstances before noticed were necessary, but for any other mode they would be absurd.

7. The sacred rite being performed, it is lastly added, "when they were come up, (εκ του υδατος) OUT OF the water," they were parted asunder; probably to meet no more till they should enter the presence of Him to whom they now rendered this act of prompt and cheerful obedience.

It is not easy to imagine how the mode of this sacred ordinance could be more minutely described. That we have here an example of IMMERSION, is allowed by the learned and candid of all denominations.

MR. TOWERSON. "For what need would there have been of—Philip and the eunuch going down INTO this [water] were it not that the baptism—was to be performed by immersion, a very little water, as we know it doth with us, sufficing for an effusion or sprinkling." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 209.

CALVIN, in his Comment on this place, observes, "Here we perceive how baptism was administered among the ancients, for they immersed the whole body in water." Ibid. p. 194.

DODDRIDGE. "They both went down to the water. Considering how frequently bathing was used in these hot countries, it is not to be wondered that baptism was generally administered by immersion, though I see no proof that it was essential to the institution. It would be very unnatural to suppose, that they went down to the water merely that Philip might take up a little water in his hand to pour on the eunuch. A person of his dignity had, no doubt, many vessels in his baggage, on such a journey through a desert country; a precaution absolutely necessary for travellers in those parts, and never omitted by them.—See Shaw's Travels, Preface, p. 4." Fam. Expos. Note in loc. See numerous other authors in Booth's Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 191 to 224.

Inference. If I find one sufficient proof of the mode of baptism in the days of the apostles, whatever that mode may be, I infer that I have ascertained what was their invariable practice. Because it cannot be imagined that the apostles (having probably witnessed, and certainly knowing well, the mode by which the Lord Jesus was baptized, and having all received the same instructions from their Lord and Master,) could be divided either in sentiment or practice. And if immersion be proved in one case, and from thence it be granted that JESUS WAS THUS baptized, and that HE COMMANDED the ordinance THUS to be administered, would not the amiable and pious Doddridge, who grants above, "baptism was generally administered by immersion," allow me to infer, (from the authority of Christ's example and command,) that this mode is "essential to the institution?" Here I have an instance of immersion, and from this I am authorized to conclude, and I do it with the utmost confidence and satisfaction of mind, that IMMERSION WAS WHAT CHRIST ORDAINED, and his obedient apostles and disciples INVARIABLY PRACTISED; and, consequently, any departure from this practice, is a departure from the revealed will of Christ; and such an act can be viewed in no other light than an act of rebellion against his Divine Authority.

§ IV. The Baptism of the Apostle Paul.

SAUL, while breathing out threatenings against the disciples of Christ, is met, in his career of persecution, by the Lord himself, at whose exceeding glory he falls prostrate on the ground. Ananias, a devout disciple, is directed of God to go to him, and teach him what he is to do; and for his encouragement in visiting the persecutor, he is informed that Saul was praying, and that God had made him a chosen vessel to himself.

Acts ix. 17. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. Chap. xxii. 14. And he said, The God of our fathers had chosen thee, that thou shouldst know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth. 15. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. 16. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Chap. ix. 18. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

The promptitude of Ananias in baptizing Saul, 'who also is called Paul,' as soon as he had received the message from his Saviour, and the restoration of his sight, shows how strictly this ordinance was observed in the days of the apostles; and, consequently, how it should be observed to the end of time. Paul is exhorted to arise, and be baptized, and wash away his sins, &c. He was to arise, and yield obedience to the command of Christ, in baptism, and, at the same time that his body received the washing of water, he was to call on the name of the Lord, that his soul might be washed and purified by being, through faith, bathed in the "fountain opened for sin." This spiritual purification, immersion in water would strikingly represent. Thus the pious poet,

COWPER.—"There is a fountain fill'd with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plung'd beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

In this instance, we have the SPIRITUAL DESIGN of the ordinance very plainly referred to. "The meaning is not," says an excellent writer, "as if remission of sins were obtained by baptism; but that, by means of the ordinance, they might be led to the sufferings, death, and bloodshed of Christ represented in it."

All our three inquiries are answered in the baptism of this illustrious man. 1. Respecting the Person to be baptized,—Paul was a believer in Christ. 2. To the Mode,—he himself refers when speaking of his baptism, and that of others, comparing it to a burial; "Therefore we are BURIED with him by baptism." Rom. vi. 4. And, 3. The Spiritual Design is to represent a washing away of sin, obtained in "calling on the name of the Lord."

§ V. The Baptism of Cornelius and his Friends.

THE next instance records the baptism of the first Gentiles received into the Christian Church. Cornelius was "a devout man, and one that feared God, with all his house." He is directed from Heaven to send for Peter the apostle; and against his coming, he called together his kinsmen and near friends. The apostle having taught them the leading doctrines of the Gospel, concludes by repeating what Christ had commissioned his apostles to do as their first and chief work, and the testimony of the prophets concerning him, in the two first verses below ; after which we have the ordinance in question.

Acts x. 42. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of the quick and the dead. 43. To him gave all the prophets witness, that, through his name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins.

44. While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 45. And they of the circumcision which believed, were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. 46. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? 48. And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

The order of the commission is here also observed. Peter began by preaching ; and never a word of baptism is found, till the people had heard the gospel, and had given certain evidences of their conversion. Then, and not till then, Peter pleads for their baptism ; and, what should be particularly observed, he pleads for it upon the ground of their being, most evidently, true BELIEVERS, and as having received the Holy Ghost. His language, in verse 47, implies that, if they did not appear to be regenerate persons, any one might object to their baptism ; but, as they had given evidences that could not be disputed, he infers, no one could deny the propriety of their being baptized. Hence, they were converts to the faith of Christ. Accordingly,

MR. HOLLAND had infallible authority for his observation. "In the first plantation of Christianity among the Gentiles, such only as were of full age, after they were instructed in the principles of the Christian religion, were admitted to baptism." In Wall's Hist. Inf. Bap. Vol. II. c. ii. § 14.

As to the manner by which these persons were baptized, nothing is said of it, by the sacred historian, beyond the simple fact. It has been suggested, however, that Peter, by the words, "Can any man forbid water," intimates that he required a little water to be brought to him, in a cup or basin, for the purpose of sprinkling ;* but the apostle neither

* If this suggestion were a fact, it is highly improbable that Peter, receiving a cup of water, would command others to baptize, as he might himself administer in the same time that he was giving the instructions to others ; and I should certainly think he would prefer doing so on so interesting an occasion, when the first fruits of the Gentile world were to be received into the church. Instead of this, he assigns that office to some other person. To me, the idea of any man (servant of speaks of little nor much water, nor about bringing it, but simply of water, and, no doubt, he intended as much as the ordinance required. It is most improper to form conjectures upon inconclusive statements of Scripture, against that which, by other Scriptures, is evidently confirmed and established. When persons are said to be baptized, we are bound to infer that they were baptized according to the Pattern and Authority of Christ. This, I conclude, was the case in this, and in every other instance.

§ VI. The Baptism of Lydia and her Household.

THE three following instances, as they relate to "households," are commonly urged in favor of infant baptism; and, indeed, as being the principal support of that practice in the New Testament. The reader will, therefore, the more particularly examine the Scriptures below in reference to the persons that constituted these households, and if he find recorded the baptism of one infant, or any thing in the text which evidently indicates it, he will consider the point as settled for ever in favor of infant baptism; but if the text does not contain such an indication of infants, but describes the baptized households as consisting of persons arrived at the years of understanding, and so capable of hearing and believing the gospel,—and especially if what is recorded implies that they actually did hear and believe, then it must be granted that adult and believers' baptism receives all the support these instances afford. The first is of Lydia and her household.

Paul, whose baptism we have just considered, is now become an apostle of Christ. He, with Silas, (and with them, probably, Luke, the writer of this history,) are commissioned from heaven to proceed to Macedonia, and to Philippi, a chief city of it, to preach the gospel. Having arrived, they began their work in the following way, and with the following success:—

Acts xvi. 13. And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither. 14. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. 15. And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house and abide there. And she constrained us.

40. And they [that is, Paul and Silas, who afterward had been imprisoned at Philippi] went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia; and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Lydia herself, it is evident, had a right to be baptized, according to the order of Jesus Christ, being a BELIEVER. But of what does it visiter) forbidding a cup of water to be brought, for the use of the master of the house, at this interesting time, is most absurd, and never could have entered the apostle's mind. The meaning, I think, certainly is, "Can any man forbid the use of water for the baptism of those persons to whom God has given, what is infinitely more important, the baptism of the Holy Ghost?"

appear, from the text, did her household consist? of children, or grown persons? Before we answer this question, we observe, there are Four things which a Pædobaptist must admit and take for granted, before he can urge this pæce in his favor; but if he can prove none of them, his argument (to use the learned Limborch's phrase) "is good for nothing."

1. That Lydia had, at this time, or lately, a husband.
2. That she had children, and children then in infancy.
3. That these children were with her at Philippi.
4. That such children were actually baptized.

The whole of these admissions I strongly question; for,

The 1st is improbable; for, had she a husband, she was not likely to be thus engaged in business: and especially as no mention is made of him, though the apostles were repeatedly at her house.

The 2d is uncertain; because there are thousands of households where there are no infant children.

The 3d is incredible; for if, as the text indicates, Lydia was come from Thyatira (a journey, including both sea and land, of probably not less than 300 miles) ON BUSINESS, it is not to be believed she would bring young children with her, if she had any.

The 4th is inconclusive; because the word household or house is used in Scripture when the whole of the family is not included, but the principal part only. See 1 Sam. i. 21, 22.

The argument, therefore, for infant baptism, grounded upon the baptism of Lydia's household, is extremely weak, as there is NO EVIDENCE SHE HAD EITHER HUSBAND OR CHILDREN: and certainly, before any such custom can from this case be supported, as an ordinance of the New Testament, it ought to be UNDENIABLY PROVED, from the text, that she had infant children, and that they were actually baptized.

Should it be replied, in favor of infant baptism, that Lydia at this time was probably a resident at Philippi, although originally from Thyatira, and that consequently her infant children must be with her,—this I would answer, by asking, Must not then her husband be with her? But this evidently was not the case, for this reason,—If Lydia had a husband with her, he surely must be ONE of the "household"—if he was one included in this household, he must have been baptized, because the household was,—if he was baptized and joined in the same union with Paul and Silas as Lydia, would she say, "Come into MY house?" or would Luke say, "they entered into the house of Lydia," supposing there was a believing husband at the head of the family? Impossible. The language employed by the inspired historian evidently implies, 'A SINGLE FEMALE AT THE HEAD OF A FAMILY, AND AT THE HEAD OF A BUSINESS.' And the fair conclusion is, that her household were her servants; or, if her children, that her husband was deceased, and her children so far advanced in life as to join in her journey, her business, and her worship; and thus they would be capable of instruction, faith, and baptism, as Christ commanded; and as in effect plainly stated of the household in the next section.

But, more satisfactory to the pious reader than ten thousand surmises, the question of the persons of Lydia's household may be answered, with the greatest probability, from the last verse above cited. Paul and Silas, being delivered from prison, and quitting the jailer's house and family, according to his own request, ver. 34, 36, they "entered into the house of Lydia," (for my reader will remember, this was the only other Christian house in the city, and in this family the only other persons baptized;) and here, undoubtedly, they would meet with her 'household' which they had baptized: having entered, we read, "when they had seen THE BRETHREN, they COMFORTED THEM, and departed." If then Lydia's household be denominated "brethren," and were capable of being "comforted" by the word, they must have been BELIEVERS IN CHRIST.

MR. WHITBY seems to consider this unquestionable. "And when she, and those of her household, were instructed in the Christian faith, in the nature of baptism required by it, she was baptized and her household." Paraphrase on the place.

LIMBORCH. "An undoubted argument, therefore, cannot be drawn from this instance, by which it may be demonstrated, that infants were baptized by the apostles. It might be, that all in her house were of a mature age; who, as in the exercise of a right understanding they believed, so they were able to make a public profession of that faith when they received baptism." Comment. in loco. In Pædobap. Ex. Vol. II. p. 359.

MR. T. LAWSON, referring to this argument, says, "Families may be without children; they may be grown up, &c. So it is a wild inference to ground infant baptism upon." Baptismalogia, p. 92.

ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES. "Of the city of Thyatira—a city of Asia—here dwelt Lydia, that devout servant of God."—"And entered into the house of Lydia: doubtless to confirm them in the faith which they had preached to them—Lydia and HERS hearing of their miraculous deliverance, could not but be comforted and confirmed in the truth." Annot. on Acts xvi. 14. 40.

The place at which Lydia was taught and baptized must have been remarkably convenient for immersion. The people were "by a river side," ver. 13, and at a place frequented by the Jews for religious purification, by washing in the water. Thus

MR. DODDRIDGE. "On the Sabbath day we went out of the city to the side of the river Strymon, where, according to the custom of the Jews, there was an oratory, or a place of public prayer."—"It is certain that the Jews had a custom of building their oratories or proseuchas, or places of public prayer, by the sea side, or near rivers, for the sake of purification." Fam. Expos. on the place.

JOSEPH JOHN GURNEY. "Although the baptism practised by John, and by the apostles, did not, in all its circumstances, resemble those Jewish washings to which I have now adverted; yet it was precisely similar to them in that main particular of IMMERSION in water." Observ. on the Pecul. of Friends, p. 61.

Inference. If the Divine word which records the baptism of Lydia and her household, and subsequently refers to them, is to be my only guide upon the inquiries before us, I must infer, 'that they were all believers in Jesus, and were baptized as their Saviour was.'

§ VII. The Baptism of the Philippian Jailer and Household.

PAUL and Silas, having been cast into prison at Philippi, are delivered from their confinement at midnight, by the miraculous interposition of God. An earthquake shook the foundations of the prison, the doors of it were opened, and the prisoners' bands loosed. The jailer, suspecting the escape of the prisoners, drew his sword to destroy himself, but which Paul prevented, by assuring him the prisoners were all there. Then follow his conversion and baptism:—

Acts xvi. 29. Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas. 30. And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? 31. And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. 32. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. 33. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. 34. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

Here observe, 1. The jailer, bringing Paul and Silas out of the prison, being persuaded that they were the servants of the true God, and were now delivered by his power from their unjust and cruel punishment; and deeply convinced, at the same time, of his own guilt and danger, urges them to tell him what he should do to be saved? To this, greatest of questions, he received a direct answer. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. It is probable, many, if not all the jailer's family, alarmed at this awful event, ran to his assistance, as his life, they would consider, imminently in danger, both by the prisoners in order to escape, and especially by the law, if any had fled. Hence Paul indirectly spake to the whole, Believe, and thou shalt be saved, yea, and thy house too, in the same way.

DODDRIDGE. "Thou shalt be saved and thine house. The meaning cannot be that the eternal salvation of his family could be secured by his faith; but that—if they also themselves believed, they should be entitled to the same spiritual and everlasting blessings with himself; which Paul might the rather add, as it is probable that many of them, under this terrible alarm, might have attended the master of the family into the dungeon." Fam. Expos. Note on the place.

2. We may next learn, from the text, in the most satisfactory manner, of what the jailer's household consisted; that they were not infants, or persons so young as to be incapable of being taught the gospel, and of believing it; for thus we read, ver. 32, "They spake unto him the word of the Lord, AND TO ALL THAT WERE IN HIS HOUSE." This household is instructed, instructed ALL, and then baptized. Infants, therefore, cannot here be included.

3. Luke further describes the jailer and his household, and shows thereby how the Lord's commission was still strictly obeyed. Paul and Silas first preached the gospel to the whole house, as observed above; and now we read, verse 34, the jailer "rejoiced, BELIEVING IN GOD, WITH ALL HIS HOUSE." Then it follows, he had no infant children, or those words cannot include them; for of this faith they would be incapable.

MATTHEW HENRY. "The voice of rejoicing, with that of salvation, was heard in the jailer's house,—He rejoiced, believing in God, with all his house: there was NONE in his house that refused to be baptized, and so made a jar in the ceremony, but they were unanimous in embracing the gospel, which added much to the joy." Expos. on the place.

CALVIN is still more expressive. "Luke commends the pious zeal of the jailer, because he dedicated his whole house to the Lord; in which, also, the grace of God illustriously appeared, because it suddenly brought the WHOLE FAMILY to a pious consent." Comment. in loco.

Inference. As the same pre-requisites to baptism are here specified, in relation to the jailer's family, as to himself, viz. 1st, that the word of the Lord was spoken to them as to him; and, 2d, that he and they equally believed in God, I must, on inspired authority, conclude, that we have here nothing more or less than a plain example of a BELIEVING HOUSEHOLD BAPTIZED, the whole being EQUALLY disciples of Christ; and as to the mode, that it was what the Lord sanctioned by his example and command, and nothing different therefrom.*

§ VIII. Paul baptizing at Corinth.

THE next instance is the baptism of several persons at Corinth, where we find the same apostle exerting himself to the utmost for the spread of the Messiah's kingdom. Here, though many opposed themselves and blasphemed, yet he zealously persevered, and his labors were crowned with success; for thus we read:—

Acts xviii. 4. And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. 5. And

* Some, in opposing the practice of immersion, have imagined great difficulties in this case. They cannot conceive where the jailer could find a suitable place, and especially in the night, to receive the ordinance in this form. It is not for us, at this distance of time, to state the place, as the sacred historian has not done so. The Scriptures affirm that "he and his were baptized:" what do these words mean? We reply (from the sense of the word, and from the other scriptures) "they were immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus." Then it falls to the part of our opponents to prove that they were not baptized in this way. These imagined difficulties have not a particle of weight upon that mind that admits that CHRIST'S AUTHORITY was Paul's only guide.

It may not be improper, however, to remind the reader how exceedingly common the practice of cold bathing was, and still is, in the East. That frequent bathing was usual among the Grecians, Romans, and now is in Turkey, in which country this city Philippi stood, is testified by when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the Spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. 8. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house: and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized.

LORD BACON. "It is strange that the use of bathing, as a part of diet, is left

A church being formed in this place, Paul afterwards writes them two epistles. In the first of these, he laments the unhappy divisions that prevailed amongst them, in contending for different ministers, as if they had so many Saviours, and had been baptized in their separate names. Upon which he reasons:—

1 Cor. i. 13. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? 14. I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius. 15. Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name. 16. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. 17. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel.

Chap. xvi. 15. Ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints.

Paul at Corinth, as at all other places, begins his work by “testifying” to the people “the things concerning Jesus Christ,” and by teaching, not by baptizing, he makes disciples to Christ. He continued his labors at Corinth a year and six months, in which time, “many hearing” his preaching, “believed, and were baptized.” He himself baptized but few, namely, Crispus, Gaius, and the household of Stephanas, and in this he afterwards rejoiced, as none of them, in their angry contentions, and excessive partiality, could say, “they were for Paul; for, Paul baptized them, and that in his own name;” for, he adds, the first and chief work for which Christ sent him, was, “not to baptize, but to preach the gospel.”

It is not said, the household of Crispus were baptized, though, had it been so, it is certain they were proper subjects of the ordinance, agreeably to the words of the institution; for, he “believed on the Lord, WITH ALL HIS HOUSE.” Their baptism, if obedient to Christ, was a matter of course.

With the Romans and Grecians it was as usual as eating or sleeping; and so it is amongst the Turks at this day.” In Stennett's Answer to Addington, p. 34.

GROTIUS, (the most learned and best informed man in Europe in his time) held it as highly probable, from the practice of the country, that the jail at Philippus was provided with baths, which would admit of the ordinance in this form without delay.

The persons who composed "the house of Stephanas," (the last household said to be baptized,) are not described where their baptism is recorded; and had nothing, in any other place, been said of them, this would have been the only house left in such uncertainty; but, as if it were the design of the Holy Spirit to leave no room for dispute, as to the proper persons to receive the ordinances of Christ, we find this family also described at the end of this epistle, as cited above: they were the "first fruits" of the word of God in Achaia, and "they addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints." They exerted themselves in acts of zeal and charity, in reference to their fellow, but poorer, or more afflicted disciples; and hence, (we scarcely need add) could not be infant children.

DODDRIDGE. "They have set themselves, &c. This seems to imply, that it was the generous care of the whole family to assist their fellow Christians; so that there was not a member of it which did not do its part." Fam. Expos. Note on the place.

GUISE. "It therefore seems that the family of Stephanas were all adult believers, and so were baptized on their own personal profession of faith in Christ." On the place.

HAMMOND. "I think it unreasonable that the apostle's bare mention of baptizing his [Stephanas'] household, should be thought competent to conclude that infant's were baptized by him; when it is uncertain whether there were any such at all in his house." Works, Vol. I. p. 492. In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 358.

MACKNIGHT. "The family of Stephanas seem all to have been adults when they were baptized, for they are said, chap. xvi. 15, to have devoted themselves to the ministry of the saints." Apos. Epis. Note on 1 Cor. i. 16.

REFLECTION ON THE BAPTISM OF HOUSEHOLDS.

WE have now found the record of Three Households baptized by the apostle Paul, or Silas, his companion; Lydia's, the Jailer's, and Stephanas'. If it were the constant practice of the apostles to baptize children with their parents, (as our Pædobaptist friends maintain,) we should reasonably have expected, and, no doubt, should have found, in various places of scripture, after naming the baptism of believers, the words added, 'and their children,' or 'and their little ones;' as families of young children are expressed in the Old Testament. And I infer that this must have been a fact in MANY instances, because we find in this book MANY THOUSANDS of adults believing, and being baptized, or added to the Lord. See Acts ii. 41, iv. 4, v. 14, &c. Would it, then, be probable that three families only would be specified as FAMILIES, while hundreds, or, it may be, thousands of other families, are not referred to in the most distant way? This, I conceive, next to impossible, and, therefore, infer that the baptism of families was comparatively of rare occurrence.

But in these three cases we have not the words 'and their little ones';

nor yet 'and their children;' (and this expression might be used without necessarily implying infants,) but the term "house" or "household" is used, which conveys no idea as to THE AGE of the persons intended, nor whether they were the children or the servants of the heads of the families; and, therefore, had nothing been said descriptive of them, it would have been exceedingly inconclusive to have inferred A PRECEDENT FOR INFANT BAPTISM from the use of the word household; because there are thousands, yea, millions of families that have no infant children. The writer of this pamphlet has baptized households; and, among others, a "Lydia and her household," and yet never baptized a child. From the word "household," therefore, to infer the baptism of infants, is completely begging the question. But, as my reader has seen, there is something said of these three households, which describes the constituents of them: from this it is DEMONSTRABLY CERTAIN, that the jailer's and Stephanas' were professedly believers in Christ, and that which is said of them is of infants impossible. And as to Lydia's, if "the brethren" Paul and Silas "comforted" in her house were her household, (and there were no other Christians in the city but the family they had just quitted,) there is no more uncertainty respecting them. Thus while households out of number are referred to in the Scriptures, and nothing is added by which we could learn of what they consisted, it has pleased God to give such information of the baptized households, as to lead the reader to infer, that they all were (as the same apostle testifies of the church, of which Stephanas and his household were members,) "called of God to the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." 1 Cor. i. 9.

The celebrated Pædobaptist writers I have cited, candidly allow that the Scriptures, regarding these households, teach nothing further upon our inquiries than what I have endeavoured to make plain to the reader. To his own judgment I cheerfully leave his decision.

§ IX. Certain Disciples at Ephesus Baptized.

THIS is the NINTH and LAST PLACE, in the Acts of the Apostles, relative to our present inquiries. The question whether the persons here referred to, were baptized twice, first with John's baptism, and now Christ's, does not affect the object of our examination.

Acts xix. 1. Paul, having past through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, 2. He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. 3. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. 4. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, That they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. 5. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. 6. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. 7. And all the men were about twelve.

That in these persons we have an example of adult baptism is clear, For, 1. They are called "disciples."—2. They "believed."—3. They "received the Holy Ghost."—4. They "spake with tongues and prophesied;" and were in number twelve MEN. We need not, therefore, add another word respecting them.

CONCLUSION OF THE ACTS.

WE have now, Christian reader, passed through all the Acts of the Apostles, and examined all the instances of the administration of this ordinance recorded in this sacred history, and to this place, we can confidently assert, That we have no where found a single place or passage, that describes, records, or implies the baptism of any infants. The reader will not suppose this a hasty conclusion, when he hears the following Pædobaptists:—

GOODWIN. "Baptism supposes regeneration sure in itself first. Sacraments are never administered to begin, or work grace. Read ALL the Acts, still it is said, they believed, and were baptized." Works, Vol. I. P. I. p. 200.

MR. T. BOSTON. "There is no example of baptism recorded in the Scriptures, where any were baptized but such as appeared to have a saving interest in Christ." Works, p. 384.

LIMBORCH. "There is no instance can be produced, from which it may indisputably be inferred that any child was baptized by the apostles." Complete Syst. Div. B. V. Ch. xxii. § II.

MR. BAXTER. (The appeal he makes to Mr. Blake, in this place, might be made, with all confidence, to every Pædobaptist.) "I conclude, that all examples of baptism in Scripture do mention only the administration of it to the professors of saving faith; and the precepts give us no other direction. And I provoke Mr. Blake, as far as is seemly for me to do, to name ONE PRECEPT OR EXAMPLE for baptizing any other, and make it good if he can." Disput. of Right to Sacram. p. 156. In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 29.

CHAPTER III.

THE EPISTLES.

WE now proceed, lastly, to examine those passages in the Apostolica Epistles which refer to this ordinance.

§ I. Passages which contain an express Allusion to the Mode, and the Spiritual Design of Baptism.

Rom. vi. 3. Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? 4. Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. 5. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

Colos. ii. 12. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.

The object of the apostle Paul in these places, and their connection, is to show the churches to which he is writing, the necessity of a holy walk and conversation. To this end he puts them in mind of their baptism, the profession they made in it, and the obligation they took upon themselves to live according to those truths symbolically taught by and in the ordinance. ‘Know ye not,’ says he to the Romans, ‘that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ,’ into a profession of his religion, ‘were baptized into his death,’ into a reliance upon, and conformity to his death, the great design of which was to take away sin; and, consequently, as our Lord died, and was buried on account of it, so should we die and be buried to the love and practice of it. Then follows this plain and striking allusion to the particular act by which the rite in question is administered, in verse 4, which, with the same allusion in the Epistle to the Colossians, reads to this effect:—

‘THEREFORE (that is, to express this very design) WE ARE BURIED ‘BY and IN BAPTISM, with Christ our Lord; and as HE WAS RAISED ‘UP from the dead by the glory of the Father, so are we at our baptism, ‘WHEREIN we likewise are RAISED UP to walk thenceforth in newness of life; and this is not of ourselves, but THROUGH THE FAITH of ‘the operation of God, who thus raised up his Son from the sepulchre ‘to live and reign for ever.’

In these places the apostle does twice describe baptism as effecting a burial and a resurrection, and as such to be a continued representation of the burial and resurrection of Christ, our Pattern and Lord; and this is realized only in immersion.

By these plain allusions to the Mode of the ordinance, the sense of the word "baptize," is most plainly exhibited and confirmed; and the necessity of "going down INTO, and coming up OUT of the water"—of "baptizing IN THE JORDAN," and where "there was MUCH WATER;" (which phrases we found in connexion with baptism,) is here evidently explained. Pædobaptist divines, of the greatest celebrity for learning and information, have frankly allowed what we have above asserted. We have no difficulty but in making such a selection as would be most highly esteemed by the reader. The following are, perhaps, the most unexceptionable that could be produced.

MR. WALL, Vicar of Shoreham, in Kent, and author of that famous work, 'The History of Infant Baptism,' for which he received the thanks of the whole clergy in convocation. "As to the manner of baptism then generally used, the texts produced by every one that speaks of these matters, John iii. 23, Mark i. 5, Acts viii. 38, are undeniable proofs that the baptized person went ordinarily into the water, and sometimes the Baptist too. We should not know from these accounts whether the whole body of the baptized was put under water, head and all, were it not for two later proofs, which seem to me to PUT IT OUT OF QUESTION: One, that St. Paul does twice, in an allusive way of speaking, call baptism a BURIAL; the other, the custom of the Christians, in the near succeeding times, which, being more largely and particularly delivered in books, is KNOWN to have been generally, or ordinarily, a TOTAL IMMERSION." Defence of the History of Infant Baptism, p. 131.

ARCHBISHOP TILLOTSON. "Anciently, those who were baptized, were immersed and BURIED in the water, to represent their death to sin; and then did rise up out of the water, to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs the apostle alludes, Rom. vi. 2—6." Works, Vol. I. Serm. vii. p. 179.

ARCHBISHOP SECKER. "BURYING, as it were, the person baptized in the water, and raising him out again, WITHOUT QUESTION, was anciently the more usual method; on account of which Saint Paul speaks of baptism as representing both the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and what is grounded on them,—our being dead and buried to sin, and our rising again to walk in newness of life." Lect. on Catechism, L. xxxv.

MR. SAM. CLARKE. "We are buried with Christ by baptism, &c. In the primitive times the manner of baptizing was by immersion, or dipping the whole body into the water. And this manner of doing it was a very significant emblem of the dying and rising again, referred to by St. Paul, in the above-mentioned similitude." Expos. of the Church Catechism, p. 294, ed. 6.

MR. WELLS. "St. Paul here alludes to immersion, or dipping the whole body under water in baptism; which, he intimates, did typify the death and burial (of the person baptized) to sin, and his rising up out of the water did typify his resurrection to newness of life." Illust. Bib. on Rom. vi. 4.

MR. NICHOLSON, Bishop of Gloucester. "In the grave with Christ

we went not; for our bodies were not, could not be buried with his; but in baptism, by a kind of analogy or resemblance, while our bodies are under the water, we may be said to be BURIED with him." Expos. of the Church Catechism, p. 174.

MR. DODDRIDGE. "Buried with him in baptism. It seems the part of candor to confess, that here is an allusion to the manner of baptizing by immersion." Fam. Expos. Note on the place.

MR. GEORGE WHITEFIELD. "It is certain that in the words of our text, Rom. vi. 3, 4, there is an allusion to the manner of baptism, which was by immersion, which is what our own church allows," &c. Eighteen Sermons, p. 297.

MR. JOHN WESLEY. "Buried with him—alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." Note on Rom. vi. 4.

MR. WHITBY, author of a Commentary on the New Testament, and more than forty other learned works. "It being so expressly declared here, Rom. vi. 4, and Col. ii. 12, that we are BURIED with Christ in baptism, by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence; and this immersion being religiously observed by ALL CHRISTIANS FOR THIRTEEN CENTURIES, and approved by our Church, and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this institution, or any license from and council of the church, being that which the Romanist still urges to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersion only permitted, as of old, in case of the Clinici, or in present danger of death." Note on Rom. vi. 4.

The apostle uses the figure of Planting, as well as of Burying, in allusion to baptism, verse 5. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." This also is in perfect agreement with the same Mode of administering it. The circumstance in nature, from which the figure is borrowed, is the same as that employed by our Lord, John xii. 24. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The seed to be planted must be buried in the soil; so the Christian in baptism is 'planted in the LIKENESS of the death, that he may be also in the likeness of the resurrection of his Lord.'

MR. MACKNIGHT. "Planted together in the likeness of his death. The burying of Christ, and of believers, first in the water of baptism, and afterwards in the earth, is fitly enough compared to the planting of seeds in the earth, because the effect, in both cases, is a reviviscence to a state of greater perfection." Note on Rom. vi. 5.

ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES. "If we have been planted together, &c. By this elegant similitude the apostle represents to us, that, as a plant that is set in the earth lieth as dead and innmoveable for a time, but after springs up and flourishes, so Christ's body lay dead for a while in the grave, but sprung up and flourished in his resurrection; and we also, when we are baptized, are buried, as it were, in the water for a time, but after are raised up to newness of life." Annot. in loco.

Inference. With certainty I may gather from the Scriptures at the head of this section, That the outward form of baptism in the apostolic age was a BURIAL IN WATER. It is made infinitely interesting to the heart of a Christian by that which it was intended to represent, viz. the death, burial, and resurrection of the Redeemer; and here too I may infer the infinite and irresistible obligation the baptized person is under to devote his life to that Lord to whose death and resurrection he is thus emblematically conformed in the baptismal rite: and I see also in these verses, by what principle and power this is all to be realized, "through faith, which is of the operation of God." In none destitute of that living principle can this intention of the ordinance be fulfilled. If sprinkling were the mode, and infants the subjects, these passages never could have been written. To the baptism of believers alone, and that administered by immersion, will these passages apply.

§ II. Occasional Mention of Baptism.

Eph. iv. 5. One Lord, one faith, one baptism.

1 Cor. xii. 13. For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

Gal. iii. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ.

1 Cor. xv. 29. Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?

To the Ephesians and Corinthians the apostle is recommending peace and unity; that they should be all of one heart and mind, so that there be no schism in the body, as all were one in Christ. To urge which, he puts them in mind of what they had been uniformly taught, that there was but "ONE LORD, ONE FAITH, ONE BAPTISM;" and that "all were baptized into ONE BODY, whether Jews or Gentiles." We should here observe, (what we have so frequently noticed before,) that the apostle places faith before baptism, as Christ the great Lawgiver had done, He that believeth, and is baptized. "One faith; one baptism." If this passage were to be expressed according to the general practice of the present day, the order both of Christ and the apostle must be "reversed." See Simeon, at p. 28.

In the above verse to the Galatians, the apostle is thought to be alluding to the change of garments which must necessarily take place after the administration of the ordinance; to which may allude the expressions, "putting off the old man with his deeds," and "putting on the new man," Eph. iv. 22, 24; Col. iii. 9, 10; and especially, as here, "putting on Christ," as "the Lord our righteousness."

ADAM CLARKE. "When he [the person baptized] came up out of the water, he seemed to have a resurrection to life. He was therefore supposed to throw off his old Gentile state, as he threw off his clothes, and to assume a new character, as the baptized generally put on new or fresh garments." Comment. on Rom. vi. 4.

The last verse cited above, 1 Cor. xv. 29, has obtained many interpretations, as the meaning of the apostle in the words, "for the dead," is not certain.

JOHN EDWARDS. "Some of the fathers hold that the apostle's argument in the text is of this sort: If there should be no resurrection of the dead hereafter, why is baptism so significant a symbol of our dying and rising again, and also of the death and resurrection of Christ. The immersion into the water was thought to signify the death of Christ, and their coming out denotes his rising again, and did no less represent their own future resurrection." In Stennett's Answer to Addington, p. 105.

MACKNIGHT. "Christ's baptism was—an emblem of his future death and resurrection. In like manner, the baptism of believers is emblematical of their own death, burial, and resurrection." Apost. Epis. Note on Rom. vi. 4.

Inference. If faith PRECEDED baptism in the apostles' days, and the persons who received that ordinance had imbibed the influence of that ONE SPIRIT, and had put on CHRIST as the robe of righteousness, the spiritual adorning of their souls, hoping for their part in the first resurrection at His appearing and glory, it is most manifest, that none but a genuine convert to Christ could thus be baptized, or enjoy such high and delightful privileges.

§ III. Baptism illustrated by Events recorded in the Old Testament.

THESE ARE THE LAST PASSAGES we find in the New Testament which relate to the subject of our examination.

1 Cor. x. 1. Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; 2. And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.

1 Pet. iii. 20. The long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. 31. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The better to understand the apostle Paul, in the first passage above, the reader would do well to peruse the account, in the Old Testament, in Exod. xiv., to which he refers. In verse 22, we are told, that the Israelites "went into the midst of the Red Sea upon dry ground;" that the water divided, opening a passage for them, and forming "a wall unto them on the right hand and on the left." We also learn, that "the cloud" which had conducted them, now removed its situation; stood between the two armies, and overspread and concealed the Israelites from their enemies; that it was bright, and "gave light" to the former, while it was "darkness" toward the latter. It does not appear that any water actually touched the Israelites in any sense whatever; and hence, the word "baptized" must be used by the apostle in a figurative sense; and if it has a reference to the mode, we have only to ask, Does the situation of the Jews, "IN the cloud, and IN the sea," best agree to sprinkling with water, or a total burial in it? Pædobaptists of the highest celebrity will answer:—

"WIRSIUS (says Mr. Booth) expounds the place to this effect. 'How were the Israelites baptized in the cloud, and in the sea, seeing they were neither immersed in the sea, nor wetted by the cloud? It is to be considered, that the apostle here uses the term 'baptism,' in a figurative sense; yet there is some agreement to the external sign. The sea is water, and a cloud differs but little from water. The cloud hung over their heads, and the sea surrounded them on each side; and so the water in regard to those that are baptized.'" In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 185.

WHITBY. "They were covered with the sea on both sides, Exod. xiv. 22; so that both the cloud and the sea had some resemblance to our being covered with water in baptism. Their going into the sea resembled the ancient rite of going into the water; and their coming out of it, their rising up out of the water." Ibid. p. 187.

By the apostle Peter, in the passage cited, we are taught that as Noah and his family "were saved by water," so baptism, the antitype of the water of the deluge, "now saves" the believer; not by a washing of his person, or a ceremonial purification, which cannot take away sin; but the water being a "like figure" in both cases, that is, EXHIBITING CHRIST AND HIS MERITS, the believer is saved by the SACRED REALITY signified. In this case, baptism is "The answer of a good conscience toward God:" both the answer given to inquiry at baptism, and the subsequent testimony of the mind to God, are conscientious, being in accordance with a sincere and heartfelt faith in the merits of the dying and rising Saviour.

OWEN. "I deny not but that there is a great analogy between salvation by the ark, and that by baptism, inasmuch as the one did repre- sent, and the other doth exhibit Christ himself." On Hebrews, Vol. IV. p. 138. Williams's Abr.

MACKNIGHT. "This answer of a good conscience being made to God, is an inward answer, and means the baptized person's sincere persuasion of the things which, by submitting to baptism, he professes to believe; namely, that Jesus—arose from the dead, and that at the last day he will raise all from the dead to eternal life, who sincerely obey him." Apost. Epist. Note in loc.

Inference. If the exercise of "a good conscience" is associated with the ordinance of baptism, in none but a believer in Christ can this union be realized.

CONCLUSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

HAVING now, my reader, completed the chief design of this pamphlet in transcribing and laying before you every passage of this sacred volume that relates to the subject of our inquiry, and contains any information, whether on the subjects, mode, or spiritual design of baptism, I have, I humbly hope, fulfilled the title I have assumed, in presenting you with "THE SCRIPTURE GUIDE TO BAPTISM." Our Divine Master commanded us to "search the Scriptures," and I have no doubt but that it would meet with His gracious approbation if this plan were adopted, in reference to any subject pertaining to His cause or kingdom. "To the word and to the testimony," is an inspired maxim in theology, and one from which no Protestant will dissent. "Ye do err," said our Redeemer, "not knowing the Scriptures."

We ought, therefore, now to be able to answer the three inquiries proposed at the beginning:—

1. Who are proper subjects of Christian baptism, according to the authority of Christ, and the practice of his apostles?

Answer. We have met with the baptism of many thousands of persons, and the ordinance administered on many different occasions; but we have no where found, through all this sacred book, any one person baptized (Christ excepted) that we have the slightest reason to suppose was not FIRST INSTRUCTED in the doctrines of the gospel, and had professed to BELIEVE; but this is either expressly testified, or so implied of all, as to leave no just ground of dispute.

II. By what mode should the ordinance be administered?

Answer. We have no where met with a single verse, word, or circumstance, which indicates the application of water, by pouring or sprinkling; but wherever any thing is found descriptive of this ordinance, IMMERSION (as the word baptism undeniably signifies) is plainly implied in circumstances, and confirmed by allusions.

III. What is its spiritual design, and in whom is it realized?

Answer. The passages that have been before us plainly indicate, that it was the Divine intention that this ordinance should exhibit and teach the important change produced by the efficacy of grace on a sinner, namely, his PURIFICATION from sin, and BURIAL as to the love and practice of it; his RESURRECTION to a new and religious life; the UNION and FELLOWSHIP into which the Christian enters with the Triune God; and his RISING from the dead, through his risen Lord, at his coming.

Here my pages might close: but when the subject of baptism was first brought under my own examination, and I had read with care these portions of Scripture; being taught from early childhood to consider infant baptism of Divine authority, I felt anxious to propose a FEW QUESTIONS to those competent to answer me: and I conceived the generality of inquirers on the subject would feel a similar solicitude. On these questions I have obtained satisfaction to my own mind; and being desirous the reader, if disposed to propose the same questions, should enjoy the same satisfaction, I shall employ AN APPENDIX to the foregoing pages, in expressing those questions, and giving such answers as to me appeared CONCLUSIVE and satisfactory. Whether the reader may consider them so or not, I leave to his own judgment and conscience, and to the influence of that Spirit, whose office it is to "guide into all truth."

I shall support the answers by citations from eminent Pædobaptist writers, as I have done my foregoing observations; and sometimes give such extracts alone, as the best and most conclusive replies.

APPENDIX, PART I.

ON THE GROUNDS OF INFANT BAPTISM, ITS RISE, AND SUPPOSED BENEFITS.

1. Question. Although in the passages of Scripture you have cited, I have not found an express authority, either by command or example, for the baptism of infants, yet will Pædobaptist divines allow that no such authority is to be found in the New Testament?

Answer. BISHOP BURNET. "There is no express precept or rule given in the New Testament for baptism of infants." Expos. of the Articles, Art. xxvii.

MR. S. PALMER. "There is nothing in the words of institution, nor in any after accounts of the administration of this rite, respecting the baptism of infants: there is not a single precept for, nor example of, this practice through the whole New Testament." Answer to Priestley on the Lord's Supper, p. 7.

LUTHER. "It cannot be proved by the sacred Scripture, that infant baptism was instituted by Christ, or begun by the first Christians AFTER the apostles." (In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 4.) See also GOODWIN, BOSTON, LIMBORCH, and BAXTER, at page 44 of this pamphlet.

2. What then are we to make of those words of our Saviour, and his subsequent conduct? Mark x. 14, 16. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them."

Answer. If, when our condescending Saviour took these children in his arms, it had been added "and he baptized them," instead of the words "and blessed them," then this passage with propriety might be adduced, and, indeed, would have decided the subject; but as the Holy Spirit has recorded the circumstance, it no more refers to infant baptism, than to infant communion, or infant circumcision.—It is certain Christ did not baptize these children, for he never baptized at all, John iv. 2; and if his disciples, who baptized for him and by his authority, had been commanded by their Lord to baptize infants, it is certain they would not have "rebuked" the parents or friends of these children for bringing them.

But this passage, by fair inference, and implication, contains an argument against infant baptism. Here you observe parents bringing their children to Jesus to crave his blessing upon them; or, at least, that he would "pray," Matt. xix. 13, that the blessing of heaven might attend them.

Now let me ask, If baptism would have brought these children into the covenant of grace, or into Christ's church, or secured to them any spiritual benefit, would the Lord Jesus have concealed that circumstance from these parents, and from his disciples? Would he 'take them in his arms and bless them,' and give them back to the parents without baptism, and without a word upon that ordinance? Was it ever known that any spiritual benefit was sought from him and he bestowed it not? Here the spiritual good of these children was sought at his hands, and if baptism was the key, the seal, the door to all the spiritual blessings of the covenant of grace, (as Pædobaptists often describe it,) would the Lord Jesus refuse it,—or send them away without it? This is impossible; and, therefore, I infer that infant baptism is no part of the will of Christ, that it can communicate no good, and ought not to be observed. Some of the most learned Pædobaptists are aware that this passage serves not their cause.

POOLE'S CONTINUATORS. "We must take heed we do not found infant baptism upon the example of Christ in this text; for it is certain that he did not baptize these children. Mark only saith, He took them up in his arms, laid his hands on them, and blessed them." Annot. on the place, in Matt. xix. 14.

BISHOP TAYLOR. "From the action of Christ's blessing infants, to infer they are to be baptized, proves nothing so much, as that there is a want of better arguments; for the conclusion would with more probability be derived thus:—Christ blessed infants, and so dismissed them, but baptized them not; therefore, infants are not to be baptized.”—Liberty of Prophecy, p. 230.

3. If the New Testament does not afford an authority for infant baptism, upon what grounds do Pædobaptist divines practise and defend it?

Answer. Mr. EDW. WILLIAMS, (one of its most zealous advocates,) affirms, “The champions [for it] are by no means agreed upon this question, On what is the right of infants to baptism founded?”*

Their grounds are various and contradictory. The early fathers who practised it, urged the virtue of the ordinance in taking away sin, and securing eternal life; adding, the certain ruin of those that neglected it.†—The church of Rome holds, “If any one shall say that baptism is—not necessary to salvation, let him be accursed.”‡—The Greek church, by Cyril, patriarch of Constantinople, affirms, “We believe that baptism is a sacrament appointed by the Lord, which except a person receive he has no communion with Christ.”§—The Lutheran church, and the church of England, hold both the ordinances “as generally necessary to salvation.” The former, agreeing with Calvin and Melancthon, ‘own a sort of faith in infants,’ affording them a right; while the English church hesitates not to baptize them, “Because they (the infants) promise by their sureties” repentance and faith, “which promise, when they come to age, themselves are bound to perform.”||

Many learned writers, as well as churches, have expressed their views upon this inquiry. Mr. Wall, Mr. Hammond, and many others, hold that the practice of ‘Judish proselyte baptism’ is the foundation of the Christian rite, and as infants received the former, so they should the latter: but Mr. Owen, Mr. Jennings, and others, have proved that no such practice existed among the Jews to afford such a pattern till generations after Christ.¶—Sir N. Knatchbull assumes circumcision as the proper foundation.—Beza, and after him Mr. Doddridge and others, considered the holiness of the children of believers, as making them proper subjects.—Mr. Matt. Henry and Mr. Dwight contended that ‘the profession of faith made by the parents’ to be their children’s right.††—Mr. H. F. Burder affirms, “The identical principle which pervades and unites the whole of the argument—is that infants are to be baptized SOLELY on the ground of connexion with their parents,” and this he explains,—“It is a connexion in the covenant of grace, the covenant of redemption, the everlasting covenant, embracing all that man can desire, or all that Jehovah can impart.”*—An anonymous writer affirms that “children by baptism are actually brought into the covenant of grace” This is denied by another, who replies that the “children of believers are really and truly in the covenant of grace before their baptism.”†

* Notes on Morrice’s Social Religion, p. 68.—† See Origen, Cyprian, and Ambrose in Mr. Wall’s Hist. of Infant Bap. Vol. I. chap. 6. 13. 14.—‡ Catechism of the Council of Trent, Part. II. p. 164.—§ Confess. Christ. Fidei, cap. xvi.—|| See Church Catechism, and Pædobap. Exam. Vol. II. p. 491, et seq.—¶ Mr. Judson’s Sermon on Christian Baptism, pp. 62, 63.— See Beza and Doddridge on 1 Cor. vii. 14.—†† Treatise on Baptism, p. 76, and Dwight’s Theology on the subject.

4. Some of the grounds assumed by those churches and eminent men, appear to have weight. Does not the “holiness” referred to, existing in the children of believers, and founded on 1 Cor. vii. 14, afford the ground required? “For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband; else were your children unclean, but now they are holy.” If holy, they are surely proper subjects of baptism.

Answer. So many good men have thought: but holiness is no where required in God’s word as a pre-requisite to baptism. And is there not an absurdity in the thought that baptism, which is the outward sign of washing away sin, Acts xxii. 16, should be administered to infants, because they are holy?

But what is the holiness intended in the above passage? The apostle says, it results from an UNBELIEVER being sanctified. Now this sanctification cannot be spiritual; for that is the work of the Holy Ghost upon the mind and heart, and in which an unbeliever has no share or part, Acts viii. 21. If attention be paid to the subject upon which the apostle is speaking, his meaning can readily be perceived. He is advising the Corinthians upon the question, ‘Whether, if a husband or wife who is converted to Christ, has an unbelieving partner, either Jew or idolator, the believer should separate from the connexion ;’ as in Ezra x. 1—14. The apostle advises, ‘If the unbelieving partner be pleased to dwell with the believer, the believer should not cause the separation.’ Then follows the passage before us, “For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife;” or, as Doddridge renders it, “is sanctified to the wife,” &c.

Now, in what sense can any thing, or person, be sanctified, in which there is no moral or spiritual holiness communicated, and the sanctification is not the work of the Holy Spirit? The Scriptures afford the reply: The temple, the altar, the offerings, the official garments, &c., under the law, were expressly said to be sanctified, when they were appointed by God’s law, and set apart to certain specified purposes. Apply this to the subject before us. Marriage is an appointment of God; and when a man or woman enters into that contract, he or she, by God’s law, is set apart, or sanctified, to stand in the relation of husband or wife; and hence the union is lawful, becoming, and pleasing to God, and shall continue to be so, though one of the parties shall be converted and the other be an unbeliever.‡

* Sermon of the Right of Infants to Baptism, pp. 7, 25; cited by Mr. I. Birt in Strictures on ditto, p. 18.—† In Pædobap. Exam. as before.

‡ MR. GILL, on the verse in question, cites a number of passages from Jewish writings, in which the word sanctified, in the phraseology of common use, is used for legally espoused. If this reading were adopted in this passage, it would not

Taking this, which appears to me to be the sense of the passage, the inference which the apostle draws from this sanctification, or legal appointment and constitution by Divine law, is natural, "else were your children unclean, but now are they holy." i. e. If the marriage union was not according to the law of God, your children would be the fruit of uncleanness; but now, the union being in harmony with God's will, they are "holy;" they are free from illegitimate impurity. So some of the greatest and best Pædobaptist writers understand the apostle. Thus among a multitude of others:—

MR. T. WILLIAMS, of London. "The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the (believing) wife, &c., so that the connexion is perfectly lawful, and the children are legitimate, or in a ceremonial sense, holy." Cottage Bible, on the place.

MELANCTHON, the Reformer. "The connexion of the argument is this, 'If the use of marriage should not please God, your children would be bastards, and so unclean; but your children are not bastards, therefore the use of marriage pleaseth God.' How bastards were unclean in a peculiar manner the law shows, Deut. xxiii." In Pædobap. Exam. Vol. II. p. 375.

SUARES AND VASQUES. "The children are called holy, in a civil sense: that is, legitimate, and not spurious. As if Paul had said, 'If your marriage were unlawful, your children would be illegitimate. But the former is not a fact; therefore not the latter.'" Ibid. p. 373.

CAMERO. "The holiness of which the apostle speaks is not opposed to that impurity which by nature properly agrees to all on account of Adam's offence, but to the impurity of which believing wives were apprehensive from their cohabiting with unbelieving husbands." Ibid. p. 372.

Inference. If the holiness which is merely legitimacy of birth, is no title to baptism, then the passage we have considered favors not the baptism of infants.

5. From this interpretation, it would appear that the children of believers are no better, or more holy by nature, than the children of unbelievers. Is this in accordance with the Scriptures?

Answer. Most unquestionably so. Thus Psalm li. 5, "Behold, (saith the son of pious Jesse,) I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." Eph. ii. 3, "We (says the apostle Paul, for himself and all the primitive Christians,) were BY NATURE the children of wrath, even as others." Romans v. 12, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Chap. iii. 9, 10, "What then, are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have only convey good sense, but make the reasoning of the apostle evident. If the word holy must be taken in a spiritual sense, and infant baptism inferred from it, the word sanctified, being evidently more of a kindred meaning, would unquestionably afford equal ground for the baptism of the unbelieving parent! Nor should it be forgotten, that the word children in this place, as in Acts ii. 39, signifies posterity of any age.

before proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are ALL under sin ; as it is written, there is none righteous, no not one." And our Saviour adds, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Ye must be born again." John iii. 6, 7.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND. "Original sin is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man ; and therefore in every person born into this world it deserveth God's wrath." Articles, Art. ix.

MR. DORRINGTON. "Although the parents be admitted into the new covenant, the children born of them are not born within that covenant, but are, as all others, born in a state of rebellion and misery." Vindicat. of the Church, p. 44.

MR. ADAM CLARKE. "All are born with a sinful nature,—there has never been one instance of an immaculate human soul since the fall of Adam. Through his transgression all come into the world with the seeds of death and corruption in their own nature ; all are sinful—all are mortal—and must die." On Rom. v. 12, 13.

MR. DODDRIDGE. "As we ALL proceed from a corrupt original, we do not more evidently bear the image of the earthly Adam in the infirmities of a mortal body, than in the degeneracy of a corrupted mind." Fam. Expos. Improv. on John iii. 1—10.

6. But God was pleased to promise to Abraham to be "a God to him and to his seed." Gen. xvii. 7. Now believers in Christ are Abraham's spiritual seed ; must not they, therefore, and their seed, be included in that promise, and possess the same spiritual benefits ?

Answer. The statement introducing this question is an important truth, that God promised to be 'a God to Abraham and to his seed ;' and so it is true that believers in Christ are Abraham's spiritual seed, and also that the God of Abraham is equally their God : but it would be not only not true, but an alarming and dangerous error, to assert that the children of believers are, on that account, also the spiritual seed of Abraham, and enjoy the same benefits. The children of believers must themselves become believers, must possess the same faith with their parents, and be Christ's genuine disciples, in order to be included in that promise and blessedness.

Hear the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 6, 7, "Abraham believed God," i. e. in reference to the coming Messiah, "and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye, therefore, that they which are OF FAITH, the same are the children of Abraham : " ver. 29, "and if ye are CHRIST'S, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." And ver. 9, "So then they which be OF FAITH are blessed with faithful Abraham."

No doctrine can be more dangerous, (because calculated to be fatally delusive,) than this, 'That because persons are born of pious parents they are therefore under some peculiar spiritual and advantageous dis-function, on account of which they are entitled to sacred privileges, and do not need equally with others the same converting grace and mercy, and the same atoning sacrifice.' John the Baptist applied the axe to the root of this tree, at the dawn of this dispensation. "Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our Father." Ye are a "generation of vipers! Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" So our Redeemer, when the Jews uttered their usual vaunt, "We be Abraham's seed," replied, "I know that ye are Abraham's seed. If GOD were your Father, ye would love me. Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." John viii. 33, 37, 42, 44. Such is CHRIST'S testimony of the carnal circumcision!

If, then, Abraham's own descendants were not his spiritual seed, while destitute of faith and love, surely none can contend that the unbelieving descendants of believing Gentiles can be that spiritual seed.

MR. EDW. WILLIAMS exposes this error in strong terms, in his Notes on Morrice's Social Religion. "Our author takes considerable pains to maintain a favorite point, which I shall pronounce a very precarious hypothesis. It is that of hereditary grace, if I may so express the notion,—that all the children of the godly are absolutely interested in all new covenant blessings. . . . But that interpretation of the Abrahamic promise, Gen. xvii. 7, which Mr. M. and some others have adopted, and which considers the words in their undistinguished application, is REPLETE WITH VERY ABSURD CONSEQUENCES. Jehovah, surely, was not the God of Abraham and of his UNBELIEVING descendants in the SAME respects. . . . The New Testament saints have nothing more to do with the Abrahamic covenant than the Old Testament believers who lived prior to Abraham." Notes, p. 312—317.

MATT. HENRY. "Grace doth not run in the blood, nor are saving benefits inseparably annexed to external church privileges; though it is common for people thus to stretch the meaning of God's promise to bolster themselves up in a vain hope. . . . The children of the flesh, as such, by virtue of their relationship to Abraham—are not therefore the children of God." Expos. on Rom. ix. 6—13.

7. But did not circumcision bring those that received it into the covenant of grace?

Answer. No: in no case whatever. The covenant of grace (as Mr. Burder expresses it, cited at p. 54,) is 'the covenant of redemption, the everlasting covenant.' Nothing can bring into that covenant but the grace of God in Christ Jesus. It existed from the beginning of the world, and righteous Abel enjoyed its blessings. It has been an ever-flowing river, communicating its saving streams to the church of God THROUGH ALL AGES, and ALL DISPENSATIONS. Enoch, Noah, and, no doubt, thousands of others, though uncircumcised, enjoyed the blessedness of this covenant before Abraham was born. Circumcision, therefore, is no part of the 'covenant of grace;' and that it did not bring Abraham into it is undeniably clear, for he enjoyed it and all its blessedness many years before circumcision was instituted; when he was, says the apostle, "not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision." Rom. iv. 10.

And that this rite did not bring children into the covenant of grace is equally evident, from the addresses of all the holy prophets and apostles, and of Christ himself, to those who had thus received that rite, and who are addressed as persons entirely destitute of the grace of God, and being by nature the children of wrath even as others. See, among innumerable passages, Isa. i. 2—15, John viii. 42—44, Eph. ii. 3, Acts vii. 51, 52.

8. In what sense, then, is circumcision ‘a seal of the covenant,’ if it had not this efficacy?

Answer. Common as it is to denominate circumcision a seal of the covenant, it is no where so denominated in the word of God. In one place, Rom. iv. 11, it is called a seal of righteousness; but except the whole verse be cited, the sense of the apostle is entirely lost. The words are these: “And he (that is, Abraham) received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised.” In no other place is circumcision called a seal; and let my reader try, after carefully looking at the whole passage, to make this applicable to infants, or to infant circumcision or baptism, or to unbelievers in any case, if he can. He will remark,

1. Circumcision is here spoken of, not in reference to its general administration to the Jewish nation, but to Abraham in particular. 2. It is spoken of, not as it might be received by a person destitute of vital piety, for it is called “a seal of the righteousness of FAITH, &c.” 3. It is not spoken of as sealing what was in future to be bestowed or enjoyed, but of a blessing long before possessed—“of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised.”

I appeal to the serious judgment of the reader, what a perversion of the sense of God’s word it must be, to call circumcision, from this passage, ‘a seal of the covenant,’ or, ‘a seal of righteousness,’ thereby referring to the national administration of that rite to the Jews, and as sealing to them the blessings of salvation, when the apostle so guardedly expresses himself as sealing only what a TRUE AND LIVING FAITH had previously obtained! This passage can apply to none but to Abraham, and those of his posterity, who, like their progenitor, possessed a converting and saving faith.

VENEMA. “Circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of faith, as the apostle affirms; but this only in respect of such Israelites as were believers.” In Pædobap. Exam. Vol. II. p. 268.

9. Why, then, was circumcision administered to infants at all?

Answer. It pleased God to enter into a particular covenant with Abraham, which he had not done with the other patriarchs, though they equally enjoyed the blessings of the covenant of grace, in which particular covenant, described in Gen. xvii. 1—14, the Almighty promised to Abraham, “I will multiply thee exceedingly—make thee exceeding fruitful; and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee.—And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after “thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.”

My reader need not be told, that an EARTHLY KINGDOM is here promised to Abraham and his seed. He was to multiply into a nation, or nations, and kings were to arise amongst them; the land of Canaan was to be their country, and their perpetual residence. In it they were to dwell from generation to generation, and to continue a separate people from all other nations, until the SPECIAL PROMISED SEED, that is CHRIST, should appear, in whom, as afterwards declared, Gen. xxii. 17, 19, “all the nations of the earth shall be blessed.”

To this covenant it pleased God to append the institution of circumcision. Thus it is given, Gen. xvii. 9—23:—“Thou shalt keep my covenant, therefore; thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations. This is my covenant which ye shall keep,—Every man child amongst you shall be circumcised; he that is eight days old, he that is born in thy house, or bought with money of any stranger, must needs be circumcised; and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with money, every male among the men of Abraham’s house, and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin in the self-same day, as God had said unto him.”

My reader will here perceive how the rite of circumcision pertained to Abraham’s household. Every male from eight days old, and every servant, or purchased slave, of any age, willing or unwilling, must submit to this rite; and if he refused, “that soul (it is added,) v. 14, shall be cut off from his people.” Can this rite, thus indispensably administered to all the males of a house, because the master received it, be to them the seal of the covenant of grace? This, I think, no enlightened Christian can for a moment imagine.

The Divine intention in making this ordinance a national rite, and requiring it to be so strictly observed upon all the male offspring of Abraham, and to those who were incorporated among them, appears evidently to be, THEIR SEPARATION AS A PEOPLE FROM THE REST OF THE WORLD, that in them, in after ages, God might accomplish his wise and gracious purposes; FIRST, in the coming of the PROMISED SEED, the Saviour of sinners; and beyond that event, in what the prophets have foretold of Israel, to be fulfilled at a period yet to come. For these designs, God was pleased to separate the Jews, by this indelible sign upon their persons: and as it was to be a national distinction, it must necessarily be a national rite, and in effecting this SEPARATION the Divine wisdom appears in applying it in early infancy.

WITSIUS. “The descendants of Abraham were separated by circumcision from other nations, and renounced their friendship; as appears from the open declaration of the sons of Jacob, Gen. xxxiv. 14, 15. A circumcised person, say the Jews, ‘has withdrawn himself from the whole body of the nations.’ And, indeed, circumcision was a great part, and as it were the FOUNDATION OF THE MIDDLE WALL OF PARTITION.” Econ. of the Cov. Book iv. ch. 8. § 20.

MR. ERSKINE. "When God promised the land of Canaan to Abraham and his seed, circumcision was instituted for this, among other purposes, to show that descent from Abraham was the foundation of his posterity's right to those blessings." Theolog. Dissert. p. 9.

10. In what sense then are we to consider the Abrahamic covenant as continued into the gospel dispensation, and enjoyed by Christians?

Answer. My reader, by comparing Gen. xv. 5, 6, 18, and chap. xvii. 1—14, will observe that the covenant (or rather covenants) made with Abraham were TWO-FOLD. 1. Spiritual and internal, pertaining to Abraham's acceptance with God, and salvation, as a believer in the coming Messiah; and which was all realized in Abraham's believing posterity, as we have already shown. 2. Worldly and external, pertaining to the land of Canaan; with which were to be united the services of the temple, a worldly sanctuary, a material altar, carnal sacrifices, and a changing priesthood; and the whole of this was intended as "a shadow of good things to come." See Heb. vii. 23, ix. 1—10, and x. 1.

Now, all that is spiritual and internal in this covenant, and as enjoyed by Israel under it, is what is called 'the covenant of grace' and is continued in the Christian church by the Holy Spirit; while what is worldly, external, and typical, is fulfilled and done away in the coming of CHRIST, and in the SPIRITUAL privileges of his church. We have now, as Christians, no worldly kingdom, nor have we a temple, altar, or sacrifices, as the Jews; nor are we required to be separated from the nations of the world, so as to be one distinct nation; and hence no carnal distinction is necessary.—"My kingdom (said Christ) is not of this world." John xviii. 36. It is not worldly in its nature, seat, form, government, or privileges; but spiritual, and, as such, denominated "the ministration of the Spirit;" and consists "in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Rom. xiv. 17. 2 Cor. iii. 7.

VENEMA. "Circumcision, according to a two-fold covenant, INTERNAL and EXTERNAL which then existed, had likewise a two-fold aspect, SPIRITUAL and CARNAL. The former referred to the internal covenant of grace: the latter to a legal, typical, and external covenant. That was concerned in 'sealing the righteousness of faith,' as the apostle asserts: this in the external prerogatives of Judaism, and in conferring external benefits. That was peculiar to the believing Israelites; this was common to the whole people." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 243.

11. Is there, then, nothing typical in the rite of circumcision?

Answer. In replying to this question, it is my happiness to be able to refer my reader to an authority which, as a Christian, he will esteem decisive and infallible. Circumcision was a type, but not of baptism, (a figure, a type of a figure!) but of 'the circumcision of the heart' and 'the putting off the sins of the flesh.' And this blessed work is accomplished, not on babes in age, but 'babes in Christ;' born from above, and children of God. Hear the infallible authority to which I refer, Rom. ii. 28, 29, "For he is not a Jew, (an Israelite indeed,) which "is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision, (in God's ultimate "design,) which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew which is one "inwardly; and circumcision IS THAT OF THE HEART; in the spirit "and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God." Phil. iii. 3, "For we are the circumcision which worship God in the spirit, "and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Col. ii. 11, "Circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, "in the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circum- "cision of Christ."

12. According to this, baptism was not instituted IN THE ROOM OF CIRCUMCISION, and so became its end and fulfilment.

Answer. It is certain that this was not the case. 1st. Because when the apostles and elders were assembled at Jerusalem, to consider the question, Whether those who were turned to God from among the Gentiles should be circumcised? Acts xv., not a word was said about the end and fulfilment of the Jewish rite in the Christian: and had this been the known appointment of Christ, this must have been the decision of the subject. 2d. Because had this been the appointment of the Saviour, it would have been an affront to his authority to continue circumcision for another day after he had substituted baptism in its place; but circumcision was observed, even by the apostle Paul, long after Christ had instituted the New Testament rite. See Acts xvi. 3. This would have been a similar impropriety to the offering of 'a sacrifice for sin,' according to the law, after Christ had 'put away sin by the sacrifice of himself!'"*

13. As you allow that circumcision was a seal in reference to Abraham as a believer; is not baptism equally a seal under the New Testament, in a believer's case?

Answer. If it be so, it must be understood in the same sense in which the apostle expressed it in the case of the patriarch; and then it would be "a seal of the righteousness of the faith which the believer had, yet being unbaptized." But we cannot do better than allow the New Testament to answer our inquiries; and here I am no where taught that any external ordinance is a seal of the covenant of grace,

* The absurdity of urging the baptism of infants from the institution of circumcision, will appear by observing, 1st. That male children only were to receive that rite; and 2d. That men servants and slaves were equally commanded to be circumcised when the master was, and that upon pain of being cut off, or put to death. If that Divine command, therefore, be applied as descriptive of the subjects of baptism, it will equally require the baptism of servants and purchased slaves, willing or unwilling, as well as of infants; and it would restrict the Christian ordinance to the male sex alone. This being so plainly contrary to the revealed will of Christ on baptism, proves the fallacy of the doctrine.

In the word of God I see no connexion or resemblance between circumcision and baptism, except in this, that they were both initiatary ordinances; the one into the body politic of Israel of old, the subjects of which rite are all the male inhabitants—the other into the body of Christ, which is his church, and the subjects of which are all believers in him. To this the apostle seems to refer in Col. ii. 11—13.

but most plainly instructed, (in beautiful harmony with the spiritual nature of the Messiah's kingdom,) that the work of the Spirit on the heart is the only seal of that covenant.

2 Cor. i. 22. "Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."

Eph. i. 13. "Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

Eph. iv. 30. "Grieve not that Holy Spirit, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

CHARNOCK. "God seals no more than he promises. He promises only to faith, and therefore only seals to faith. Covenant graces, therefore, must be possessed and acted, before covenant blessings be ratified to us." Works, Vol. II. p. 781. ed. 1.

VITRINGA. "The sacraments of the New Covenant are of such a nature as to seal nothing but what is spiritual, nor to be of any advantage, except in regard to those who really believe in Jesus Christ." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 268.

14. How, then, is the doctrine of the Church of England to be understood, by which we are taught, that a child by baptism is "incorporated" and "grafted into the body of Christ's Church;" and in another place, "made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven?"

Answer. To support that doctrine by any thing said in the Scriptures of this ordinance, (as the reader of the preceding pages must be aware,) is impossible: to make it agree with the analogy of faith as taught by the concurring testimony of the whole of Divine revelation is equally impossible. What is here attributed to baptism, the Scriptures ascribe to the omnipotent agency of the HOLY GHOST in regeneration, and to the infinite efficacy of the REDEEMER'S CROSS in securing eternal life!! See 2 Thes. ii. 13. 1 Pet. iii. 18. Baptism, then, is here said to do, what nothing short of the power and grace of God is able to perform; and that children, as they advance in life, should be taught to express and believe such a doctrine, and to consider themselves in the possession of such spiritual advantages, merely by having received this external rite, destitute as it is of all saving efficacy, is inexpressibly lamentable and dangerous; because it might prove, as it is fitly calculated to be, fatal to their souls!

MR. JOHN HYATT, (the late excellent minister of the Tabernacle, London.) "If the church of Christ is his body, and every real believer is a member of that body, how important the question, Are we members of the body of Christ? Millions have been taught to say, that in baptism they are made members of Christ, who have given indubitable proofs that they uttered falsehood!! The members of the body of Christ are united to him as a head; and there are no dead, no unsanctified members. All are useful, active, and obedient. Ah! my hearers, beware of deception—beware of substituting the name for the reality—the form of godliness for the power. Surely, licentious characters cannot presume that they are members of the mystical body of the Son of God. A holy head, and impure members; a pure fountain, and corrupt streams; a good tree, and bad fruit;—these are anomalies. If you are united to him, you are of one spirit with him." Sermons on various Subjects, p. 363.

15. But if infants are not to be received into the Church by baptism, and they should die in infancy, is not their salvation endangered?

Answer. By no means. How can the want of that endanger salvation which God hath nowhere enjoined or required? Did not our Lord receive UNBAPTIZED children into his arms, when on earth, and bless them, and send them away unbaptized; and without uttering a word about baptism? See question 2. And who then will say that baptism is necessary that He should receive them to himself in heaven; especially when they remember his gracious declaration in reference to these unbaptized children, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven?" See Mark x. 14, and Matt. xviii. 10.

Persons dying incapable of faith in Christ, are without doubt saved, not by water, nor by the work of man; but by the blood of Christ, and by the power of the Spirit. In like manner persons dying in faith, but having no opportunity of being baptized, as the penitent on the cross, are saved by the same infinitely efficacious, and the ONLY sufficient means.

If we do for our children what God hath required, we shall find this quite sufficient, without attempting to do what God hath not required. And should it please God to remove them from us in infancy, it is better to commit their souls to the merits of Christ, than to the unauthorized application of water to their bodies. The former we are sure saves: 1 John i. 7. And we are equally sure baptism cannot save; Acts viii. 13, 23; and is not necessary to salvation, Luke xxiii. 43. To apply baptism for salvation, therefore, is making a false saviour of the ordinance, and implies a criminal unbelief in the all-sufficiency of Christ.

16. Admitting the want of Scripture authority for infant baptism, on what other authority is it supposed to be originally founded?

Answer. Some have urged in its behalf apostolical tradition. Others, a council of bishops, held at Carthage, A. D. 253. Higher authority it has not; and neither of these can Protestants admit.

MR. FIELD. "The baptism of infants is therefore named a tradition, because it is not expressly delivered in Scripture that the apostles did baptize infants; nor any express precept there found that they should do so." On the Church, 375.

BISHOP PRIDEAUX. "Pædobaptism—rests on no other Divine right than Episcopacy."* Fascicul. Contro. Loc. iv. § iii. p. 210.

* In the Edict drawn up in the year 1547, by command of Charles V. Emperor of Germany, to allay disputes between the Romanists and the Reformers, Tradition is expressly stated as the ground of infant baptism: "Habet præterea Eccle-

17. If this be granted, when was infant baptism supposed to be introduced ?

Answer. There is no certain evidence of it earlier than the beginning of the third century, after Christ. At that period it was practised in Africa, and is mentioned, for the first time, by Tertullian, about the year 204, in his work entitled "De Baptismo," which I shall cite presently.

CURCELLÆUS, (a learned divine of Geneva, and professor of Divinity.) "The baptism of infants, in the two first centuries after Christ, was altogether unknown; but in the third and fourth was allowed by some few. In the fifth and following ages it was generally received. The custom of baptizing infants did not begin before the third age after Christ was born. In the former ages, no trace of it appears—and it was introduced without the command of Christ." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 76.

SALMASIUS AND SUICERUS. "In the two first centuries no one was baptized, except being instructed in the faith, and acquainted with the doctrine of Christ, he was able to profess himself a believer; because of those words, He that believeth, and is baptized." Ut supra.

VENEMA. "Tertullian has no where mentioned pædobaptism among the traditions or customs of the church, that were publicly received, and usually observed.—For in his book, De Baptismo, he dissuades from baptizing infants, and proves the delay of it to a more mature age is to be preferred. Nothing can be affirmed with certainty, concerning the custom of the church before Tertullian, seeing there is not any where, in more ancient writers, that I know of, undoubted mention of infant baptism." Ut supra, p. 74.

The passage alluded to, containing the FIRST MENTION of infant baptism, is the following:—

TERTULLIAN. "Pro cujusque personæ conditione ac dispositione, etiam ætate, cunctatio baptismi utilior est, precipue tamen circa parvulos. Quid enim necesse est sponsos etiam periculo ingeri? Quia et ipsi per mortalitatem destituere promissiones suas possint, et proventu malæ indolis falli. Ait quidem Dominus, Nolite illos prohibere ad me venire. Veniant ergo dum adolescent, veniant dum discunt, dum quo veniunt decet: fiant Christiani, dum Christum nosse potuerint. Quid festinat innocens ætas ad remissionem peccatorum? Cautius agetur in sæcularibus; ut cui substantia terrena non creditur, divina credatur. Norint petere salutem, ut petenti dedisse videaris. . . . Si qui pondus intelligant baptismi, magis timebant consecutionem quam dilationem: fides integra secunda est de salute." De Baptismo, cap. xviii.

sia traditiones, &c. quas qui convellit, is negat eandem columnam esse et firmamentum veritatis. Hujus generis sunt Baptismus parvulorum et alia." i. e. "The Church moreover has traditions handed down to these times from Christ and the apostles, through the hands of the bishops: which whoever would overturn, he must deny the same (viz. the Church) to be the pillar and ground of truth. Of this sort are the baptism of little ones, and other things." In Dr. Ryland's Candid Statement, Notes, p. 28.

TRANSLATION.

“The delay of baptism may be more advantageous, either on account of the condition, disposition, or age of any person, especially in reference to little children. For what necessity is there that the sponsors should be brought into danger? because either they themselves may fail of the promises by death, or be deceived by the growth of evil dispositions.—The Lord, indeed, says, Do not forbid them to come to me. Let them, therefore, come when they are grown up; when they can understand; when they are taught whither they are to come. Let them become Christians when they can know Christ. Why should this innocent age hasten to the remission of sins? Men act more cautiously in worldly things; so that Divine things are here intrusted with whom earthly things are not. Let them know how to seek salvation, that you may appear to give to one that asketh. . . . If persons understand the importance of baptism they will rather fear the consequent obligation than the delay: true faith alone is secure of salvation.”

Now I request my reader to observe—1. That there is confessedly no mention of infant baptism in the writings of any of the Fathers, before Tertullian, in the beginning of the third century; though the baptism of believers is repeatedly found, in various authors; some of which I shall cite in the next part of this appendix. 2. That when infant baptism is first mentioned, in the Christian Father above quoted, it is in a passage where the rite is referred to, not as of something of universal practice and approbation; but where it is OPOSED AND REASONED AGAINST as something unknown in the age of Christ and the apostles, and destitute of their authority, for with him their authority would not have been questioned for a moment; and as something implying danger in reference to sponsors, and absurdity relative to children. Thus,

REGALIUS, the learned annotator upon Cyprian. “In the Acts of the Apostles we read that both men and women were baptized when they believed the gospel preached by Philip, but not a word of infants. From the age of the apostles therefore, up to the time of Tertullian, the matter remained in obscurity, [or doubtful, in ambiguo;] and there were some who from that saying of our Lord, Suffer little children to come unto me, to whom the Lord nevertheless did not command water to be administered, took occasion to baptize even new-born infants. And as if, (seculare aliquod negotium cum Deo transigeretur,) they transacted some secular business with God, they offered sponsors or sureties to Christ, who engaged that they should not revolt from the Christian faith when grown up; which indeed displeased Tertullian.” In Stennett's Answer to Russen, pp. 69, 73, and in Mr. Wall's Hist. Vol. II. chap. 2.

18. Tradition from the apostles, is declared by the church of Rome to be the authority for infant baptism; is this said to be its authority where the practice is first mentioned?

Answer. No such authority is ever once hinted at.

VENEMA “Tertullian dissuades from baptizing infants—which he certainly would not have done, if it had been a tradition, and a public custom of the church, seeing he was VERY TENACIOUS of traditions; nor, had it been a tradition, would he have failed to mention it?" See after next question.

19. Do we find any other innovation introduced into the Church of Christ, about the same period?

Answer. Several. We never read of—1. The consecration of the baptismal water; 2. The use of sponsors; 3. The imposition of hands at baptism; 4. The use of material unction at confirmation; 5. Offering prayers and oblations for the dead, &c.; we never read of any of these in any Christian writer before Tertullian; and hence, learned Pædobaptists infer that they were introduced about that time. Thus, Mr. Pierce, speaking of the third of these, says, that Tertullian is "the most ancient author that mentions this rite;" and adds, "We make no doubt it began about the time of Tertullian." Vindication of Dissenters, Pt. III. ch. vii. pp. 172, 175. We come to the same conclusion, for the very same reason, respecting the baptism of infants. The celebrated and learned divine I cited in the former question seems willing to admit this:—

VENEMA. "I conclude, therefore, that pædobaptism CANNOT be plainly proved to have been practised before the time of Tertullian; and that there were persons in his age who desired their infants might be baptized, especially when they were afraid of their dying without baptism; which opinion Tertullian opposed, and, BY SO DOING, INTIMATES THAT PÆDOBAPTISM BEGAN TO PREVAIL." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. pp. 79, 80.

20. Did the first Christian Fathers, who supported the baptism of infants, suppose that some spiritual benefit was communicated to them by that ordinance?

Answer. They did.—They held that baptism was necessary to salvation; that forgiveness accompanied it; that infants by it were purged from the pollution of original sin; and that all persons dying without baptism were lost. Thus,

CYPRIAN, A. D. 253. "As far as lies in us, no soul, if possible, is to be lost. It is not for us to hinder any person from baptism and the grace of God; which rule, as it holds to all, so we think it more especially to be observed in reference to infants, to whom our help and the Divine mercy is rather to be granted; because by their weeping and wailing at their first entrance into the world, they do intimate nothing so much as that they implore compassion."

AMBROSE, A. D. 390. "For no person comes to the kingdom of heaven, but by the sacrament of baptism.—Infants that are baptized are reformed back again from wickedness to the primitive state of their nature."

CHRYSOSTOM, A. D. 398. "The grace of baptism gives cure without pain, and fills us with the grace of the Spirit. Some think that the heavenly grace consists only in the forgiveness of sins; but I have reckoned up TEN advantages of it." "If sudden death seize us before we are baptized, though we have a thousand good qualities, there is nothing to be expected but hell." See the original of these passages in Mr. Wall's Hist. of Inf. Bap. Vol. I. ch. 6, 13, 14; and II. ch. 6.

These extracts, which I might have increased a hundredfold, are sufficient to prove that some of the Fathers, from about the middle of the third century, considered baptism as essentially necessary to salvation; and in this false view of the ordinance, the baptism of infants originated. To this agree the following learned writers:—

SUICERUS, Professor of Greek and Hebrew at Zurich. "This opinion of the absolute necessity of baptism arose from a wrong understanding of our Lord's words, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. II. p. 129.

SALMASIUS, the very learned historian and critic. "An opinion prevailed that no one could be saved without being baptized; and for that reason the custom arose of baptizing infants." Ibid. p. 128.

21. But if a profession of repentance and faith was always required before baptism in the apostolic age, how could Christian ministers, or churches, so early as the days of Tertullian, admit of the baptism of infants, by whom no such profession could be made?

Answer. The deficiency, in reference to infants, was ingeniously supplied by introducing "sponsors." They would not dispense with the profession, but they would admit it by proxy. Two or three persons, and, in the case of an infant of high rank, from twenty to an hundred, were admitted as "sureties," who professed, in behalf of an infant, to repent, renounce the devil and his works, and to believe the doctrines of the gospel. These sureties are first mentioned by Tertullian, A. D. 204, in the passage I have copied, pp. 65, 66, where they are called "sponsors," i. e. persons who answer, and make themselves answerable for another.

Here is religion by proxy; real, personal, experimental religion! a thing unheard of before since the world began. But when so many strange absurdities were introduced into the church, as those before mentioned, p. 67, we need not be much surprised at this. To a reader, however, who knows by his own experience, and by the concurrent testimony of every part of the Bible, that there is no religion but that which is between God and the soul, and is God's gift, and in which another can have no share or part, it is grievous to reflect seriously on this alarming innovation.

22. But do modern Pædobaptists entertain the same view as the ancients, as to the necessity of baptism to salvation?

Answer. The MAJORITY of professed Christians have ever avowed, and do still avow, the same doctrine! The church of Rome has honored those who dare deny it with an "anathema;" and the Greek church, though not so ready to anathematize, entertains the same opinion. The reformed churches, and the different denominations of Protestant Pædobaptists, whether bearing the name of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Independents, Congregationalists, or Wesleyans, while they generally disavow that doctrine, yet they hold opinions, which, when fairly carried out to their consequences, come little short of the same amount. They have seen in the doctrine of the ancients, and of Rome, 'that no one can be saved without their baptism,' too plain a demonstration of the 'little horn' of antichrist,*—the mystery of iniquity which began to work in the apostles' days,†—to avow that doctrine in the same terms. But let me ask my respected brethren in these communities, If baptism makes its subjects, as some of them say,‡ "children of God and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven;" or, as all of them, by their leading writers, have said, that it brings its subjects "into the church of Christ" or "into the covenant of grace," or "seals to them the benefits of that covenant," and which is "the covenant of redemption, embracing all that Jehovah can impart;" whether this is not tantamount to the doctrine guarded by Rome's anathema? If baptism brings into, or seals the benefits of, the covenant of grace, it will bring to heaven; for God hath joined these two together. And if there be not another way of bringing into this 'covenant of grace and redemption' what must become of those who are not brought in, and who die in that situation? Thus pressed to consequences, I see no other conclusion to be come at from these premises, but that of Chrysostom, just cited, horrible as it sounds! Let my brethren who would recoil at the thought of that conclusion, examine rigidly and honestly whether the virtues they join to the rite of baptism afford not the just and fair ground of it. And if the conclusion be denied, let them deny the premises from which it is drawn; but while they avow the premises, I must be allowed to insist upon the conclusion.

23. If no spiritual or saving benefit necessarily attends the ordinance of baptism, (which evidently is, and ever has been, conceived as the basis and reason of infant baptism, by the MAJORITY of those that have practised it,) why is the ordinance administered at all? and of what use is it in the church of Christ?

Answer. "God is his own interpreter." The ritual ordinances appointed of God in his church were never, under any dispensation, intended by him to carry salvation with them. For that purpose "neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision," as the apostle affirms; and the same may be said of baptism and the Lord's supper. Salvation proceeds from a source entirely distinct and separate from these ordinances. It may be fully enjoyed without them; and they may be administered, and repeated a thousand times over, without it. The penitent malefactor was saved without baptism: Simon Magus was baptized without part or lot in salvation.

* Daniel vii. 8—21 † 2 Thes. ii. 3—10. ‡ See Authorities at pp. 54, 55.

What, then, you inquire, is the use of baptism? I reply, It is a solemn, sacred institution of Jesus, intended by him, as I have before observed, TO EXHIBIT AND TO TEACH the way of salvation. It saves in no way of itself; but it presents a figurative and an impressive representation of saving,—of that real saving, which is through the purifying merits of a crucified and risen Saviour. As such Christ instituted it; and as such it is the duty and privilege of his followers to observe it, till he come. Thus the apostle Peter, cited p. 49, when he says, Baptism saves; he immediately guards against error upon this subject,—it is not the putting away the filth of the flesh, or impurity, or sin of any kind, which can only be cleansed by the blood of Christ. But it saves as a “figure;” it symbolically presents “the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness,” and to that fountain it directs the penitent to flee, and therein by faith “to wash away sin, calling on the name of the Lord.” Acts xxii. 16. When this is realized, then baptism affords the answer of a good conscience, satisfied that Christ is obeyed, guilt purged away, and the soul saved through the blood of the Lamb. Pædobaptist divines affirm the same. Thus,

MR. DAVID DAVIDSON, on 1 Peter iii. 21. “Lest any should imagine spiritual deliverance secure by the external rite, in any other sense than figuratively, the apostle adds, that the baptism he chiefly meant was the cleansing of the conscience, which is by faith in Christ. The same figure and reality are repeatedly thus stated. See Eph. v. 26; Tit. iii. 5; Heb. ix. 14.” Commentary on the New Test. p. 459.

24. Who is the first Christian writer that defended the baptism of infants?

Answer. The first that mentioned the practice at all was Tertullian, A. D. 204. It was named next by Origen, A. D. 230. But the first writer that defended the practice was CYPRIAN, A. D. 253. At this period the plan of admitting a profession by sponsors became so general, at least in Africa where it commenced, and the security the rite afforded of eternal life was deemed so important, that the practice of it became general. Hence Synods and Councils were held to sanction the practice, and to consider the time after birth when the ordinance may be properly administered. Thus, the very learned writer cited before—

REGALIUS. “Most men thinking this opinion of Tertullian unsafe, were of Cyprian’s mind, that even new-born children ought to be made partakers of the laver of salvation; which was pitched upon in the decree of this Synod, AND SO THE DOUBT WAS TAKEN AWAY.”* In Stennett’s Answer to Russen, pp. 69—73, and in Mr. Wall’s Hist. Vol. II. ch. 2.

* Regalius here refers to a SYNOD, the decision of which took away any farther doubt as to the propriety or necessity of infant baptism. The reader should be informed that during the lives of the African Fathers, Cyprian and Augustine, several general meetings of the ministers of that district, which were called COUNCILS or SYNODS, were held at Carthage, and Milevis, to consult and decide on certain subjects. At the first of these, held at Carthage, A. D. 253, sixty-six of those ministers, or bishops as they are called, being present, with Cyprian for their president: one Fidus, a country bishop, submitted two questions for decision, the latter of which was “Whether an infant, before it was eight days old, might be baptized, &c.”

APPENDIX, PART II.

ON THE SCRIPTURAL MODE OF BAPTISM.

IN my first section, I promised my reader to refer again to the MODE of Baptism, and expressed my hope to satisfy any candid inquirer on the subject; and this I conceive I shall do, not by the quantity of what I shall write on the subject, for I shall be very brief, but by stating arguments, which I consider irresistibly convincing and decisive. In this part, as in the former, I shall suppose my reader disposed to put enquiries involving all the leading points of the controversy.

1. Question. Are the most learned and competent writers agreed, that the sense you have given, at p. 13, of the words chosen of God to express this ordinance, (baptize and baptism,) is their ordinary and most proper sense?

Answer. More competent authority the learned world does not afford than the following:—

WITSIUS. "It cannot be denied that the native signification of the words βαπτειν and βαπτισμα, is to plunge, to dip." Econ. of the Cov. L. IV. c. xvi. § 13.

CALVIN. "The word baptize, signifies to immerse, and the rite of immersion was observed by the ancient church."*

ZANCHIUS. "The proper signification of baptize is to immerse, plunge under, to overwhelm in water."

ALSTEDIUS. "To baptize, signifies only to immerse; not to wash, except by consequence."

need required?" He urged his objections, from which the reader may form some idea of these African bishops, 1. "That an infant in the first days after its birth is unclean, so that any of us abhors to kiss it!" This kiss of peace was an African accompaniment of baptism. 2. He questioned "Whether so young an infant be a PERFECT HUMAN CREATURE!" The Council decided against him, as seen in Cyprian's Letter to Fidus, of which, at p. 67, is an extract.

In the councils over which Augustine presided, from A. D. 416 to A. D. 420, the bishops were disposed to go much farther than at any former period. They enacted their canons, and pronounced their anathemas, in the pure spirit of antichrist. Thus in the Milevitan council, fourteen or fifteen being present, as deputies from the whole, they decreed "Placuit ergo omnibus episcopis," &c. "It is therefore the pleasure of all the bishops, that whosoever denieth that infants newly born of their mothers are to be baptized . . . let him be accursed." And in the "Synodical Epistle of the Council of Carthage to Innocent" of Rome, the same imprecation occurs. "Quicumque negat parvulos per baptismum Christi a perditione liberari," &c. "Whoever denies that infants are by Christian baptism delivered from perdition, and brought to eternal salvation, let him be anathema." In Mr. Wall's Hist. of Inf. Bapt. Vol. I. chap. xix. § 28. Robinson's Hist. of Eapt. chap. xxii. Mr. Gill's Argument from Apost. Trad. considered, p. 22. The authority of these canons being admitted at Rome, "the doubt of infant baptism" yielded co-extensively with that authority.

* See this author and those that follow cited at greater length and their works referred to in Booth's Pædob. Exam. Vol. I. pp. 44 to 65. EIGHTY-TWO such authorities are there adduced

BEZA. "Christ commanded us to be baptized; by which word it is certain immersion is signified."

VITRINGA. "The act of baptizing is the immersion of believers in water. This expresses the force of the word."

H. ALTINGIUS. "The word baptism,—properly signifies immersion; improperly, by a metonymy of the end, washing."

SCAPULA. "To baptize,—to dip or immerse, as we immerse any thing for the purpose of dying or cleansing in water."

MR. LEIGH. "The native and proper signification of it [baptize] is, to dip into water, or to plunge under water."

BOSSUET, bishop of Meaux. "To baptize signifies to plunge, as is granted by all the world."

To the above I might add many living authors :—

MR. EWING, of Glasgow. "Βαπτίζω, in its primary and radical sense, I cover with water. It is used to denote, 1st. I plunge, or sink completely under water." Gr. Lexicon, sub voce.*

EDINBURGH REVIEWERS. "They tell me, (says Mr. Carson,) that it was unnecessary to bring forward any of the examples to prove that the word signifies to dip,—that I might have commenced with this as a FIXT POINT UNIVERSALLY ADMITTED." In Carson's Answer to Edin. Presbyt. Review, p. 9. A. D. 1832.

2. As in one branch of the Christian church, the Greek language has been continued from the age of the apostles, and with them the words βαπτίζω and βαπτισμα (baptize and baptism), remain unaltered, and in common use to this day, —let me ask, How do they understand the words? and how administer the ordinance?

MR. R. ROBINSON. "The native Greeks must understand their own language better than foreigners, and they have ALWAYS understood the word baptism to signify dipping; and, therefore, from their first embracing of Christianity to this day, they have always baptized, and do yet baptize, by Immersion. This is an authority for the meaning of the word infinitely preferable to that of European lexicographers. In this case the Greeks are unexceptionable guides"† Hist. of Bapt. pp. 5, 6.

* MR. EWING, the author of a very useful Greek lexicon, gives several other senses to the word, and at length contends that it will admit of sprinkling. If this were true, it would not materially affect our present inquiry; because we cannot admit that our Lord would employ a word to express this ordinance, which, in the first, plain, and most common use of it, signifies immersion, if he intended sprinkling, supposing the word would bear that sense in a distant and unusual interpretation of it. But it is demonstrated by MR. CARSON, in his recent elaborate work on baptism, that the word has but one proper sense, namely, that which MR. EWING admits above as its first sense.—Mr. Cox makes the following appeal to Mr. E. :—"I now once again demand of MR. EWING to point me out the lexicon, which does NOT give dipping, plunging or immersing as the unquestionable, settled, and universally admitted PRIMITIVE SIGNIFICATION of the contested terms." On Baptism, p. 83.

† Mr. Robinson was an Anti-pædobaptist.

3. But what is denominated the "Greek Church" is now extended over an immense portion of the globe; is the same mode of baptism observed in all the nations included in it?

The PANTALOGIA, under the article 'Greek Church,' thus explains— "That part of the Christian church which was first established in Greece, and is now spread over a larger extent of country than any other established church. It comprehends in its bosom a considerable part of Greece, the Grecian isles, Wallachia, Moldavia, Egypt, Abyssinia, Nubia, Lybia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Syria, Cilicia, Palestine. . . . It may be observed, that amid all their trifling rites, they practise trine-immersion, which is unquestionably the primitive manner."*

MR. WALL. "The Greek church, in all the branches of it, does still use immersion." Hist. of Inf. Bapt. Vol. II. p. 376, Ed. 3.

SIR P. RICAUT. "Thrice dipping or plunging, this church holds to be as necessary to the form of baptism, as water to the matter." In Pæd. Exam. Vol. I. p. 268.

4. Is there any evidence in the writings of the first Christian fathers after the apostles, respecting the mode of baptism as administered by them, and in their times? for it is not likely that the mode observed by Christ and the apostles would be immediately changed.

Answer. The first Christians after the days of the apostles could never bring themselves to make so great a change in an institution of Christ, as to substitute sprinkling for immersion. Such a change would require several ages to bring the public mind to receive it; as every one, acquainted with church history, knows was the case. There was a disposition early manifested to make ceremonial additions to Christ's appointments, such as consecrating the water, &c., but there is no evidence whatever of altering the mode of this ordinance, except as a recourse or expedient for dying persons, &c., for above 1000 years, as I shall attest presently.

If then we can ascertain the mode of baptism in the first centuries following the apostles, without doubt it will be what the Lord ordained. And happily there is abundance of evidence upon this subject. I shall cite a few short passages, and the references may lead the reader, if disposed, to a deeper investigation:—

BARNABAS, Paul's companion. An epistle ascribed to him has escaped the ravages of time. Two passages refer to baptism; in one he says, "Blessed are they, who, fixing their hope on the cross, have gone down into the water." The other, "We descend into the water, . . . and come up out of it, bring forth fruit, having in our hearts reverential fear, and hope through Jesus." Epist. cap. xi.

* 'Trine-immersion,' or immersing the person three times, once in the name of each of the Divine Persons, was in use in the beginning of the third century. It was practised in England till the sixteenth century; and is still rigidly observed in the eastern churches.

HERMAS, honored by Paul's salutation, Rom. xvi. 14. A Latin version of his work, entitled, 'the Pastor,' or Shepherd, is extant. In it he speaks of the apostles accompanying the persons to be baptized into the water. "The apostles and teachers—preached to them that "before were dead, and gave them this seal; for they, (apostili, &c. "descenderunt in aquam cum illis,) went down with them into the water, and came up again." See this and other allusions in Lib. 1. vis. 8, sect. 7; and Lib. III. similis. 9.

JUSTIN MARTYR. About A. D. 140, Justin Martyr wrote 'An Apology for Christians, addressed to the Emperor, the Senate, and people of Rome.' In this work he describes the doctrines and ordinances of the Church of Christ; and on baptism has the following passage:—"I will "now declare to you also after what manner we being made new by "Christ have dedicated ourselves to God, lest, if I should leave that "out, I might seem to deal unfairly in some part of my apology. They "who are persuaded and do believe that those things which are taught "by us are true, and do promise to live according to them, are directed "first to pray and ask of God with fasting, the forgiveness of their former "sins; and we also pray and fast with them. Then we bring them to some "place where there is water, and they are baptized by the same way of "baptism by which we were baptized: for they are washed (ἐν τῷ ἕδατι) "in the water in the name of God the Father, Lord of all things; and "of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and of the Holy Spirit." *Justin Mart. Apolog. II. sect. 79.

TERTULLIAN, A. D. 204. "Because the person [to be baptized,] in "great simplicity... is let down in the water, and with a few words "said, is dipped." Homo in aqua demissus, et inter pauca verba tinctus. Again, when speaking of the vain anxiety to be baptized in the Jordan,— "There is no difference whether one is washed in a sea or in a "pool, in a river or in a fountain, in a lake or in a channel; nor is "there any difference between them whom John dipped in Jordan, and "those whom Peter dipped in the Tiber:" quos Joannes in Jordane, et quos Petrus in Tiberi tinxit. He also uses the words, "In aqua mergimur," i. e. "we are immersed in the water." De Baptismo, cap. 2, 4, 7.

GREGORY NAZIANZEN, A. D. 360. "We are buried with Christ "by baptism that we may also rise again with him; we descend with "him that we may also be lifted up with him; we ascend with him

* Upon this passage of Justin Mr. WALL remarks, "This is the most ancient account of the way of baptizing, next to the Scripture; and shows the plain and simple manner of administering it." And MR. REEVES, the learned translator of Justin, adds, in a note, "Tis evident from this place of Justin and that of Tertullian, (de Cor. Mil. c. 3), that PONDS and RIVERS were the only Baptistries or Fonts the church had for the first two hundred years. The Catechumen being brought to the baptistry, was thus interrogated, Dost thou renounce the devil?—Dost thou renounce the world? &c. &c. Ans. I do renounce them.—Next he made an open confession of the faith, the bishop asking him, Dost thou believe in God? &c., to which the person answered, I do believe. And this form of interrogation the apostle is thought to refer to when he styles baptism the answer of a good conscience towards God.—After this confession is made, the candidate (Mr. Reeves adds) was "thrice plunged under water at the naming of the Three Persons in the blessed Trinity." Apologies, Vol. I. p. 97. Note.

“that we may also be glorified with him.” Orat. 40. In Stennett's Answer to Russen, p. 144.

BASIL, A. D. 360. “Ἐν τρεῖσι τοῖς καταδύσεισι,” &c. “By three immersions the great mystery of baptism is accomplished.” In Stennett, as above.

AMBROSE, A. D. 374. “Thou wast asked, Dost thou believe in God the Father Almighty? Thou saidst, I do believe, and wast immersed, that is, thou wast buried, (mersisti, hoc est, sepultus es.) Thou wast asked again, Dost thou believe on our Lord Jesus Christ and his crucifixion? Thou saidst, I believe, and wast immersed again, and so wast buried with Christ.”*

CYRIL, of Jerusalem, A. D. 374. “As he, ὁ ἐδύων ἐν τοῖς ὕδατι, who is plunged in the water, and baptized, is encompassed by the water “on every side; so they, that are baptized by the Spirit, are also wholly covered all over:” &c.*

CHRYSOSTOM, A. D. 398. “To be baptized (καὶ καταδύεσθαι) and plunged, and then to emerge or rise again, is a symbol of our descent into the grave, and our ascent out of it; and therefore, Paul calls baptism a burial.” Homil. XL. in 1 Corin.

5. Do learned Pædobaptists grant that this practice of immersion was the general, and esteemed the only legitimate, mode of baptism, among the early Christians; and that in this they were obediently following the instruction of Christ and the apostles?

WITSIUS affirms,—“It is certain that both John the Baptist, and the disciples of Christ, ordinarily practised immersion; whose example was followed by the ancient church, as Vossius has shown, by producing many testimonies from the Greek and Latin writers.” Econ. of the Cov. Lib. IV. cap. xvi. § 13.

MR. BOWER. “Baptism by immersion was undoubtedly the apostolical practice, and was never dispensed with by the church, except in case of sickness,” &c. Hist. of the Popes, Vol. II. p. 110.

G. J. VOSSIUS. “That the apostles immersed whom they baptized there is no doubt. . . . And that the ancient church followed their example is very clearly evinced by innumerable testimonies of the fathers.” Disputat. de Bap. Disp. I. § 6.

MR. REEVES. “The ancients carefully observed trine-immersion, insomuch that by the ‘Canons Apostolical,’ either bishop or presbyter

* The sense of immersion is so clearly conveyed in these passages, and repeated over in so many forms of expression, that it is quite impossible to misunderstand the ancients upon the subject. I will transcribe the Latin of Ambrose, and the Latin version that accompanies the Greek of Cyril.

AMBROSE. “Interrogatus es, Credis in Deum Patrem Omnipotentem? Dixisti, Credo: et mersisti, hoc est, sepultus es. Iterum interrogatus es, Credis in Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, et crucem ejus? Dixisti, Credo, et mersisti: ideo et Christo es sepultus.” De sacram. Lib. II. cap. vii. Paris, 1632.

CYRIL. “Sicut enim is qui in aquis immergitur et baptizatur undiquaque ab aquis cingitur; sic et illi a Spiritu baptizati et obvoluti perfecte sunt.” Catechis. XVII. § xiv. Paris, 1720.

who baptized without it was DEPOSED FROM THE MINISTRY." See the Canons, 42 to 50. Reeves' Apologies of Justin, &c. Vol. I. p. 97.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA ECCLESIASTICA. (This splendid work, now publishing, A. D. 1835, under the patronage of the highest authorities in the British nation, both in church and state, after stating the reasons urged in defence of sprinkling, proceeds,) "Whatever weight, however, may be in these reasons as a defence for the present practice of sprinkling, IT IS EVIDENT that during the first ages of the church, and for MANY CENTURIES afterwards, the practice of immersion prevailed; and which seems indeed NEVER to be departed from, except where it was administered to a person at the point of death, or upon the bed of sickness,—which was considered indeed as not giving the party the full privileges of baptism,—or when there was not a sufficient supply of water. Except in the above cases, the custom was to dip or immerse the whole body. Hence St. Barnabas says, We go down into the water," &c. &c. Article, Baptism.

6. Admitting this evidence as demonstrative of the original practice, must it not be a display of ignorance and weakness to oppose or contradict it; and, indeed, to ridicule that mode, as some do, a profane contempt of the wisdom and authority of Christ?

MR. WALL, (who explored all the voluminous writers of antiquity in search of evidence of infant baptism,) says, "This [immersion] is so plain and clear by an INFINITE NUMBER of passages, that as one cannot but PITY the weak endeavors of such Pædobaptists as would maintain the negative of it, so we ought to disown and show a dislike of the PROFANE scoffs which some people give to the English Anti-pædobaptists merely for the use of dipping; when it was, in all probability, the way by which our blessed SAVIOUR, and FOR CERTAIN, was the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient Christians did receive their baptism. 'Tis a great want of PRUDENCE as well as of HONESTY to refuse to grant to an adversary what is CERTAINLY TRUE, and may be PROVED so. It creates a jealousy of all the rest that one says."—"The custom of the Christians in the near succeeding times [to the apostles] being more largely and particularly delivered in books, is KNOWN to have been generally or ordinarily a total immersion." Hist. of Inf. Bapt., Pt. II. ch. ix. § 2. And its Defence, p. 131.

PROFESSOR CAMPBELL. "I have heard a disputant, in defiance of etymology and use, maintain that the word rendered in the New Testament baptize, means more properly to sprinkle than to plunge; and IN DEFIANCE OF ALL ANTIQUITY, that the former was the earliest, and—the most general practice in baptizing. One who argues in this manner never fails with persons of knowledge to betray the cause he would defend; and though with respect to the vulgar, bold assertions generally succeed as well as argument, and sometimes better; yet a CANDID MIND will always DISDAIN to take the help of FALSEHOOD, even in the support of truth." Lectures on Pulpit Eloquence, Lect. x. p. 304.

EDINBURGH REVIEWERS. "We have rarely met, for example, with a more WEAK and FANCIFUL piece of reasoning, than that by which Mr. Ewing would persuade us that there is no allusion to the mode by immersion, in the expression 'buried with him in baptism.' This point ought to be FRANKLY ADMITTED, and indeed cannot be denied with any show of reason." In Mr. Carson's Answer, as before, p. 40.

7. How long was immersion continued as the general practice among all Christians ?

Bishop BOSSUET. "We are able to make it appear, by the acts of Councils, and by the ancient Rituals, that for THIRTEEN HUNDRED YEARS, baptism was thus [by immersion] administered throughout the whole church, as far as possible." In Stennett's Answer to Russen, p. 176.

STACKHOUSE. "Several authors have shown, and proved, that this immersion continued, as much as possible, to be used for THIRTEEN HUNDRED YEARS after Christ." Hist. of the Bible, P. 8, p. 1234. See also Mr. Whitby, cited at p. 47.

8. At what period, and on what accounts, was the custom of pouring, or sprinkling, first introduced ?

Answer. There is no earlier record, that Mr. Wall could discover, than in the case of Novatian, about the middle of the third century. This man while unbaptized, as Eusebius records, (Eccles. Hist. L. VI. c. 43,) "fell into a dangerous disease, and because he was very like to die, was baptized in the bed where he lay," (εν κλινῃ περι χυδεντα, i. e. sprinkled over in bed; or water poured all over him, the word signifies,) "if that might be termed baptism." Novatian recovered; and by the following circumstance we have remarkably preserved the view which the Christian church generally took of his baptism. The See of Rome became vacant, A. D. 251. Two persons were chosen to succeed, namely Cornelius, 'chosen by the major part,' and this Novatian, in a 'schismatical way.' Cornelius writes a long letter to Fabius, Bishop of Antioch, in which he describes the case of Novatian, and says, (as Mr. Wall translates it,) "that Novatian came not canonically to his order of priesthood, much less was he capable of being chosen bishop:" Let the reader mark the reason assigned, "For that ALL THE CLERGY, and a GREAT MANY of the Laity, were against his being chosen Presbyter; because it was not lawful, (they said) for any one that had been baptized in his bed, [Greek, as above, poured over,] as he had been, to be admitted to any office of the clergy." Wall's Hist. Part II. ch. ix. § 2.

Here is the first recorded case of affusion, either pouring or sprinkling, for baptism; and here we have a serious objection taken against the person so baptized on account of it; an objection in which "all the clergy" were united. What was the objection? Was it against his situation, as being sick in bed? or against the mode of the ordinance? This is important to be ascertained. I answer, It was against BOTH; for soon after this time these two objections against such a baptism were exhibited. 1. There was an objection against a person sick, because, as the Council of Neocæsarea affirmed by the 12th canon,

“He that is baptized, when he is sick, ought not to be made a priest, for his coming to the faith is NOT VOLUNTARY, but from necessity.” And, 2. As to the mode, while Novatian was living, one Magnus submits this question to Cyprian—“An habendi sint Christiani legitimi, eo quod aqua salutari non loti sunt, sed perfusi ?” i. e. “Whether they are to be ESTEEMED RIGHT CHRISTIANS, who are not washed in the water, but only sprinkled ?” Cyprian answers, that the baptism was to be esteemed good, “necessitate cogente,” “necessity compelling to it, and God granting his indulgence.” I leave the reader to reflect on the force of this evidence.

From this period, A. D. 250, onward, sprinkling was permitted, but only in a case of necessity, and in prospect of death ; originating in a false view of the necessity of the ordinance to salvation. “France (says Mr. Wall) seems to have been the first country in the world where baptism by affusion was used ordinarily to persons in health.” This affusion, or pouring, in the church of Rome, was first tolerated in the eighth century, while immersion was still the established law of the church ; and so things stood for several hundred years. In the sixteenth century, pouring was generally adopted. The Rituals of that church prove this to a demonstration. See Robinson’s History of Baptism, p. 525 ; and Bishop Bossuet, just cited.

The Church of England held the original practice of dipping longer than those of the continent. “Perfunduntur (says Erasmus, A. D. 1530,) apud nos, merguntur apud Anglos.” i. e. “With us (the Dutch) they have the water poured on them ; in England they are dipped.” The Rubric to this day instructs the clergyman, “he shall dip in the water discreetly and warily ;” but it allows an exception, “but if they shall certify that the child is weak, it shall suffice to pour water upon it.” The Catechism requires the youth to express the form of baptism only as by immersion, “Water wherein the person is baptized.” In the early history of this church “the offices or liturgies (says Mr. Wall) did ALL ALONG . . . enjoin dipping, without any mention of pouring or sprinkling.” In A. D. 1549, first appeared the exception for ‘weak’ children : four years afterward the word thrice, after the order to dip, was omitted. Sprinkling began to prevail about A. D. 1550, and “within the time of half a century, from A. D. 1550 to 1600, PREVAILED TO BE THE MORE GENERAL ; as it is now almost the only way of baptizing.” Mr. Wall’s Hist. of Inf. Bap. Pt. II. ch. ix. § 2.

9. In what proportion of the Christian world has immersion been continued down to the present time ?

Answer. MR. WALL. “What has been said of this custom of pouring or sprinkling water in the ordinary use of baptism, is to be understood only in reference to THESE WESTERN PARTS OF EUROPE : for it is used ordinarily nowhere else. The Greek church does still use immersion ; and so do all other Christians in the world except the Latins. All those nations of Christians that do now, or formerly did submit to the authority of the Bishop of Rome, do ordinarily baptize their infants by pouring or sprinkling ; but all other Christians in the world who never owned the Pope’s usurped power, DO and EVER DID DIP their infants in the ordinary use. . . . All the Christians in Asia, all in Africa, and about one-third part of Europe, are of the last sort." Hist. of Inf. Bap. Part II. ch. ix. p. 376. Ed. 3.

Does my reader wish me to proceed any further? To my mind the subject is perfectly settled; because the evidence adduced before us has been, not in criticisms upon words, but in plain historical FACTS; facts admitted by every Christian writer that has examined the subject; and, as they include the practice of the apostolic age, they are DECISIVE upon the subject.

The contention, therefore, that the word Baptize has other senses beside to immerse, and that the prepositions rendered into and out of, in the baptism of the eunuch, may be rendered to and from the water; all this is perfect quibbling and trifling when the FACT is conceded, that Jesus, and his apostles, and the primitive Christians, observed and authorized the ordinance in this form. Thus the late editor of Calmet, after warmly contending against the views of the Baptists, adds, "Here again, I say, let me not be misunderstood; I believe that immersion was practised by John." Why, granting this, he grants me all: for if this was the form in which 'the LORD of glory' was baptized, and what he authorized, I want no more.

To a person disposed to question the evidence for immersion, I would beg to propose the following inquiries, founded upon those historical facts briefly given in the foregoing pages, and which he may more fully examine in the works I have referred to:—

1. How came it to pass, that the early Christian writers expressed the rite of baptism by such Greek and Latin words and phrases (exclusive of baptizo) as signify, to be plunged; to be buried; to be dipped; to be immersed; to be let down in the water, and to be encompassed by the water on every side?

2. How came it to pass, that when affusion or sprinkling was had recourse to, as an expedient in prospect of death, and the person recovered, he was not deemed so properly baptized as to be admissible to any sacred office?

3. How came it to pass, that the fathers should name, as suitable places for baptizing, "the sea, a pool, a river, a fountain, a lake, a channel, the Jordan, the Tiber;" and that the baptism may be alike "in" any one of them?

4. How came it to pass, that by the authority of the 'Canons Apostolical,' if a Bishop or Presbyter baptized by any other way than immersion, yea, trine-immersion, he should be deposed?

5. How comes it to pass, that those Christians with whom the command of the Lord Jesus to baptize is in their NATIVE TONGUE, have, in all ages of their history, observed this mode?

6. How comes it to pass, that the ANCIENT RITUALS of those churches in which pouring and sprinkling now prevail, solemnly ENJOINED, or do still enjoin, the mode of immersion?

7. How came it to pass, that the whole Christian world, however afterward divided, uniformly observed immersion, except in sickness, for THIRTEEN HUNDRED years?

Now, though the evidence I have produced upon these points from ancient and modern writers be brief, which it would have been much easier to have extended than to have thus compressed, it is beyond doubt, that what the above inquiries state, are

INCONTROVERTIBLE HISTORICAL FACTS.

And if the New Testament contained no decisive evidence on the subject, the above FACTS afford a most indisputable proof that immersion was the original, and if so the DIVINELY AUTHORIZED mode; and consequently that which should be INVARIABLY and UNALTERABLY observed to the end of time; for who can alter what Christ ordains?

APPENDIX, PART III.

ON THE SPIRITUAL DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

THAT this sacred ordinance was intended by the Great Head of the Church to be SYMBOLICAL, and to teach by an expressive and visible sign what the gospel taught by the word preached, is a truth too evident in the New Testament to be doubted; and that the particular form or mode of it was to be indicative of some important truths, and that its observance was to have a beneficial influence on the Christian church, are equally clear. We have now in few words to state, what the ordinance was intended to teach, what to exhibit, and what practical influence it should have on the church of Christ.

1. It was to teach the sinfulness of man, and the necessity of purification from sin, in order to eternal life. These truths are implied in Peter's words, when exhorting to the ordinance; "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins;" and in Ananias', "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts ii. 38. xxii. 16.

2. Baptism was intended to teach and to signify the Christian's entire abandonment of a life of impiety, and his entrance upon a new life of devotion and dedication to God. The metaphors of a death and burial express the former, and a resurrection the latter. Hence the apostle, Rom. vi. 8, declares the Christian "dead with Christ;" and not only dead, but "buried with him;" and here Christ's own institution is introduced to confirm the apostle's doctrine; "therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death," &c. See the Scriptures at p. 45.

3. Baptism was intended to exhibit our LORD'S overwhelming sufferings—To this most interesting circumstance our blessed Redeemer does himself allude in affecting terms. See pp. 22, 23.

4. No less does baptism pre-represent what the Christian anticipates as the destiny of his own human nature, when he shall descend like his Redeemer into the grave, and at his Saviour's second coming be raised to glory. So the apostle, "Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all." In no way but immersion does the ordinance answer this and the foregoing designs.

5. And, finally, this sacred rite, in reference to its subjects, appears evidently designed to form a line of separation between the world and the church. A baptized person, in the primitive age, was considered as having come out from the ungodly, and assumed the character and profession of a follower of Christ. "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Gal. iii. 27. Just as when a person, entering the service of an earthly prince, puts on the attire by which the servants of that prince are distinguished, so the Christian, by baptism, puts on, as a garment, an open profession of his Lord and Master; declaring that he is no longer his own, or the servant of sin and Satan, but bought with a price, and now surrenders himself to him that loved him and died for him. This entire separation of the church from the world our Saviour most plainly taught in John xv. 19. xvii. 6, 9, 20, 21, and xviii. 36. As did also the apostles; see, as an example, 2 Cor. vi. 14 to 18. In none but believers can this practical use of baptism be realized.

CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS.

IN closing my little work I must request my reader's attention to a few thoughts, suggested by the general objections of opponents to the practice for which I have contended; and add my reasons, in a summary form, for abiding strictly by that practice.

I. OBJECTIONS TO EXCLUSIVE BELIEVERS' BAPTISM.

1. In the form of objection to the principles of the Baptists, relative to this ordinance, it has been remarked that 'The MAJORITY of Christians, with whom are associated an immense number of great, good, and learned men, have held, and do hold, the opposite views;' and (it is asked) 'Can they all be wrong?'

Answer. I admit that a large majority of the professed Christian inhabitants of the world, with whom are joined many most eminent writers, are against us. But is a majority never wrong,—never found on the side of error? Let my reader, whoever he may be, ask 'Whether the majority of professed Christians do not think differently from him upon some equally important points? and how little does he think of the consequence of numbers upon those points?' The Chinese plead their majority against Christians; the Catholics against Protestants; &c. &c., but who feels the force of an argument in the plea?—And "as to great men and great names (says Mr. A. Clarke) we find them enrolled and arranged on the side of ALL controversies;” and I will allow my opponent to reckon them up by hundreds, or thousands, and place them all on the side of infant baptism;—I will take and place on the other side, Christ and his apostles, and then I appeal to my reader, Who has the BEST SUPPORT, though my number be but ‘a little flock’ in the comparison ?

Now I must be allowed to INSIST UPON IT that I have Christ and the apostles with me, giving their sanction to believers’ baptism; and all will admit, that their sanction is NOT TO BE FOUND on the opposite side. Much then as I venerate the great, good, and learned men referred to, as not they, but Christ is my Lord and Master, and is to be my sole Judge at the last day, I hesitate not to quit my connexion with any majority, or with any particular eminent men, supposing I am found in a minority, IF CHRIST IS WITH ME THERE.

2. It has also been objected ‘That our principles are of recent origin; and were unknown previous to the appearance of certain enthusiasts in Germany, at the time of the reformation.’

Answer. Our principles are as old as Christianity. We acknowledge no founder but Christ. With enthusiasts in Germany, or in any age or country, we have no connexion, and our forefathers never had. Enthusiasts may be designated by the same name, but that proves nothing.—Persons holding our distinctive principle, i. e. ‘the baptism of believers only’ have appeared in all ages of the Christian era. From Christ to nearly the end of the second century there were NO OTHERS; at least, if there were any, their history is a blank.* After infant baptism was introduced, many did not receive it, and many opposed it.

How else can we account for the case of Ambrose, Jerome, Augustine, and others, who, says Bishop Taylor, “were born of Christian parents, and yet not baptized until the full age of man, and more?”† How else can we account for the pressing exhortations found in early writings, addressed to professed Christians, to come to baptism?‡ How, especially, can we otherwise account for the awful anathemas pronounced at different times by the dominant party, upon those that denied infant baptism ?

If my reader has opportunity to make himself acquainted with the history of the numerous bodies of Christians which appeared at different periods, while popery was dominant in Europe, he will find that there were many MYRIADS OF PERSONS, who, for several centuries before the Reformation, lifted up their voice against that spiritual domi-

* It may be proper to state, that Mr. Wall thought that there was a passage in Irenæus, in the second century, favorable to infant baptism. “Christ,” says Irenæus, “came to save all persons by himself; all, I mean, who by him (renascuntur in Deum) are regenerated to God; infants, and little ones, and youths, and elder persons.” Now, if the word regenerated had no other sense than baptized, and Christ came to save only those who received that ordinance, and by it, then this passage would be, what Mr. Wall calls it, “the first express mention of infant baptism.” But as it is, it is begging the question to cite it at all on the subject.

† Dissuasive from Popery, Pt. II. p. 117.

‡ See Basil’s Oratio Exhort. ad Bapt. in Mr. Wall’s Hist. Pt. I. ch. xii. § 3.

nation; and that those several sects held the distinctive principle of the Baptists, given above; or in their own words, as recorded by Mr. MOSHEIM, "That no persons whatever were to be baptized before they came to the full use of their reason:" "Because to all infants, that know nothing of faith, in whom there can be no desire of regeneration, or confession of faith, &c., the will, faith, and confession of another, seem not in the least to appertain." Eccles. Hist. Cent. XII. ch. v § 7. and in Stennett's Answer to Russen, p. 84.

Such was the avowed sentiment of the followers of GUNDULPHUS in Italy; of the BERENGARIANS in France; of the PATERINES in the Dutchy of Milan; of the PETROBRUSIANS and HENRICIANS in Languedoc and Provence; and of the followers of ARNOLD, of Brescia, who suffered at Rome, A. D. 1155.—All these are sometimes included in the general name of WALDENSES, and their history may be traced backward from the time of the reformation through several centuries "Some of the popish writers own (says President EDWARDS) that that people never submitted to the church of Rome. One says 'The heresy of the Waldenses is the oldest heresy in the world.' It is supposed that this people betook themselves to this secret place among the mountains, to hide themselves from the severity of the heathen persecutions which were before Constantine the Great. And thus the woman fled into the wilderness from the face of the serpent. Rev. xii. 6 and 14." (History of Redemption, Period III. Pt. ii. 1.) To this agrees BEZA, who says, "As for the Waldenses, I may be permitted to call them the seed of the primitive and purer church." On baptism their confession is given in these words—"We believe that in the ordinance of baptism, the water is the visible and external sign, which represents to us—the renovation of our minds through Christ Jesus, and by this ordinance we are received into the holy congregation of God's people, PREVIOUSLY PROFESSING AND DECLARING OUR FAITH, and change of life." See Jones' Hist. of this people, Vol. II. pp. 49, 50, 70. 2d Ed.

To the Waldenses succeeded the MENNONITES; i. e. the Baptists, or Anabaptists, as they are sometimes contemptuously called, at this time an extensive body in various nations on the continent of Europe. Thus, the learned Mr. MOSHEIM says, "The true origin of that sect which acquired the denomination of Anabaptists... and derived that of Mennonites from the famous man to whom they owe the greatest part of their present felicity, is hidden in the DEPTHS OF ANTIQUITY... The Mennonites are not entirely in error when they boast of their descent from the Waldenses, Petrobrusians, and other ancient sects, who are usually considered as witnesses of the truth in the times of general darkness and superstition." Eccles. Hist. Cent. XVI. Sect. III. pt. ii. ch. iii. My reader may judge from this of the nature of the objection as to the recent origin of Baptist principles.*

* In reference to Great Britain, in particular, during the first centuries, it may be affirmed, that from the first introduction of Christianity into it, until Pope Gregory (A. D. 596,) sent over Austin to this country with a number of monks to convert the people to the Catholic faith, we have good reason for believing that believers' baptism alone prevailed in this country; for Austin, finding differences to exist between his views and the British Christians, called their ministers together, and proposed "Three things," in order to their having his favor and pro

3. On the mode, it is objected 'That it is more troublesome, and inconvenient than the usual mode of sprinkling; and quite a cross to submit to it.'

Answer. I admit this, as certainly the feeling of human nature: but, I beg to inquire, Is the trouble and inconvenience too great, and the cross too heavy to be borne, if I have proved that Christ sanctioned that mode by his command and his example? Who, as a Christian, if present on the banks of Jordan when Christ was baptized, would refuse or object to be the next person to be baptized after Christ, and in the same way? And if then, when the Holy Spirit was visibly descending, and the Father's voice was heard, you would cheerfully have entered the streams of Jordan, is not the ordinance the same now, equally binding, endearing, and as much under the eye and the blessing of heaven? Without doubt: and surely your Redeemer has done enough, and suffered enough for sinners, to entitle him to this act of obedience from them, supposing it does give them a measure of trouble, and inconvenience, and a cross to bear after him. Hear his own words,—"He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 38.

4. But, it is added, 'The quantity of water can matter nothing; any more than the quantity of wine or bread in the Lord's supper.'

Answer. This is granted, providing only there be a sufficient quantity to fulfil Christ's command. It is not the quantity that is contended for, but a conformity to the pattern of Christ; and any departure from that pattern renders the act no longer an act of obedience to him.

5. But, objects another, 'I have, I hope, received the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which is the thing signified; and I do not see the necessity of submitting to this rite, as it cannot take away sin, or do me any good.'

Answer. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is made, by the apostle Peter, the very reason why those that received it should receive this ordinance—"Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized which HAVE RECEIVED the Holy Ghost as well as we?" (See p. 35.) And as to the good the ordinance can do, and its inability to take away sin, I again refer to him who had no sin to take away, and needed no good from religious services, yet travelled a long journey 'to be baptized,' and silenced every objection against it by affirming "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

lection. The second of these things was, "THAT YE GIVE CHRISTENDOME TO CHILDREN," i. e. that they should baptize them: good proof that they did not do so before. And it is known that Pope Gregory, above referred to, decreed as follows:—"Let all young children be baptized, as they ought to be, according to the traditions of the Fathers." What an evidence is this of the omission of infant baptism, and the kind of authority by which it was authorized and urged! See Ivey's Hist. of the English Baptists, Vol. I. pp. 42-45.

The reader should also be informed, that infant communion began about the same time as infant baptism, and attended it till about A. D. 1000. It was administered for the same reason, i. e. on account of its saving efficacy. In the East it is still continued.

II. REASONS FOR THE BAPTISM OF BELIEVERS ONLY.

1. Because I am quite sure that I have plain SCRIPTURE AUTHORITY for believers' baptism; but to authorize the baptism of infants not a word, in inspiration, is to be found.

2. Because the baptism of believers is in harmony with the doctrines of the gospel, and the nature of Christ's kingdom, which 'is not of this world,' but spiritual, and extends no further amongst men than FAITH and Christian experience extend. John i. 11—13.

3. Because baptism, being an act of obedience to Christ, must have Christ's command, or authority; the baptism of believers only has this; (see p. 26.) "Can that be obedience," inquires Mr. Baxter, "which hath no command? Who knows what will please God but himself: and has he not told us what he expects from us?"

4. Because the doctrine of infant baptism, namely, 'that children by it are brought into the covenant of grace, which is the covenant of redemption, or 'the benefits of that covenant sealed to them,' is opposed to all the leading doctrines of the gospel, whether according to the views of Arminians or Calvinists. What, in this case, becomes of the doctrine of God's Election? of the necessity of Repentance? of the New Birth? of Conversion? of Faith in Christ? and of Justification through Faith? &c. &c. All these are superseded by baptism, if the above doctrine be true.

5. Because of the dangerous practical tendency of infant baptism. If children, advancing into life, believe the above doctrine, they are likely to rest satisfied in the 'benefits sealed,' and without any further concern, without faith or piety, live in the hypocrite's hope, and perish with 'a lie in their right hand!'

6. Because infant baptism goes to unite the world with the church of Christ. Have not the vilest infidels in Christendom received 'the seal of the covenant, and been grafted into the church, the body of Christ?' How grossly absurd! How lamentable, that they should have cause to pour contempt upon Christianity by the errors and follies of its professors!

7. Because I would not have the impression on my mind while in this life, or the remembrance at the Bar of future Judgment, that I had 'reversed' Christ's order, which is the case in infant baptism, (see Simeon, p. 25,) or altered the mode which his wisdom ordained; preferring to follow my SAVIOUR'S plain and endeared example, and to abide by his sacred and authoritative instructions.

FINAL ADDRESS TO THE READER.

I WILL now imagine that you, my reader, are convinced that I have the truth with me on this subject: allow me, then, in behalf of CHRIST, to exhort you practically to attend to this sacred institution. Do you ask, What is prerequisite to baptism? I answer, these three things: (1.) To see and feel that you are a sinner, and need the remission of sins, Acts ii. 38. (2.) That you believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and rely on him as your only Saviour, Acts viii. 37. (3.) That you feel willing to forsake all ungodliness, and to devote your future life to the service and glory of your REDEEMER; willing, and not ashamed, to put on CHRIST, and follow him to the skies. Rom. vi. 4; Gal. iii. 27.

If these things are found in you, and you are convinced of the will of CHRIST, delay not doing his will. "If ye love me, (said he,) keep my commandments." Do not entertain frivolous excuses.

1. Do not say 'you are too young.' At twelve years of age your Lord appeared in public, doing the will of his Father; if you have reached that age, it is high time to commence a life of dedication to Christ. Go, youthful reader, and follow the Lamb in the morning of life. Who knows but your sun may go down at noon! His promise is, "They that seek me early shall find me."

2. Do not say 'you are too old.' If you have far exceeded the age above mentioned, and yet hear the Saviour's voice, 'follow me,' you are not too old to obey his endeared and binding commands.

3. Do not say 'what good can it do you?' Behold your Lord entering the waters of Jordan! Are you wiser or better than he? Beware that you reflect not on his wisdom.

4. Does the ordinance appear a cross to you? and especially so, as it is something that does not fall in with the taste and fancy of the world? Thank God for that. Christ never intended his religion, or his ordinances, to suit the fancies of unregenerate men; and the more objectionable this ordinance is to such persons, so much more effectual is it as a line of demarcation between the world and his church, as the Lord Jesus intended. And as to the cross,—do you think it is too heavy? Behold him passing through the baptism of his inconceivable sufferings for you! Behold him carrying the cross upon which he was suspended for many hours; and thereon, by his dying pains, working out eternal redemption for you! And will you, turning from these unparalleled scenes, say 'the cross of baptism is too heavy for you!' Impossible, if you feel aright.

To bear his name—His cross to bear,
Our highest honor this!
Who nobly suffers now for him,
Shall reign with him in bliss.

THE PRACTICAL USES
OF THE ORDINANCE OF BAPTISM.

Extracts from a Circular Letter of the Northamptonshire (England) Baptist Association.

THAT Christian baptism is properly administered only by immersion, and to those who make a credible profession of faith in Christ, it is no part of our present design to prove. Addressing ourselves to you, we shall take each of these particulars for granted. The sole object to which we now request your attention is, the influence of this ordinance, (where it produces its proper effects) in promoting piety in individuals, and purity in the church.

There is no part of true religion that is merely speculative: the whole is designed and adapted to sanctify the soul. We may presume, therefore, that if baptism be an ordinance of God, and of perpetual obligation in the church, it is of importance to Christian practice.

But it is not on presumptive evidence that we wish to rest the improvement of this institution, any more than the institution itself: neither shall we go about to connect with it acknowledged duties by imaginary alliances; but shall confine ourselves to those uses of the ordinance which are actually made, or suggested in the New Testament. We could address many things to parents, and things of importance too, on bringing up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: we could also urge it upon the children of believers, that they were cast upon the Lord from their earliest infancy: but as we find nothing of this kind in the Scriptures connect- ed with baptism, however important these things would be in their place, they would be altogether irrelevant while treating on this ordinance.

Baptism is a Divine institution pertaining to the kingdom of the Messiah, or the gospel dispensation. John received it "from heaven," and administered it to the Jews, who, on his proclaiming that "the kingdom of heaven was at hand," confessed their sins. Jesus gave sanction to it by his example; and, after his resurrection, when all power in heaven and earth was committed to him, confirmed, and extended it to believers of all nations. Whatever circumstantial differences there might be, therefore, between the baptism of John and that of Christ, they were substantially the same. There were things in former ages which bore a resemblance to it; as, the salvation of Noah and his family in the ark, the passage of the Israelites through the sea, divers washings or bathings prescribed by the Mosaic ritual, &c. but the thing itself existed not, till it was revealed to the immediate forerunner of Christ.

The principal design of it appears to be, a solemn and practical profession of the Christian religion. Such was the baptism of John, who "said unto the people, that they should believe on him who should come after him; that is, on Christ Jesus." And such was that in the times of the apostles. Paul, addressing himself to the churches in Galatia, who, after having professed to believe in Christ, cleaved to the Mosaic law as a medium of justification, thus speaks: "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith: but after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have PUT ON CHRIST." The allusion is to the putting on of apparel; as when one that enters into the service of a prince, puts on his distinguishing attire: and the design of the sacred writer is to remind those of them who had before professed the Jewish religion, that by a solemn act of their own they had, as it were, put off Moses, and put on Christ. There is a putting on of Christ which is internal, and consists in relinquishing the former lusts, and being of the mind of Christ; (Romans xiii. 14.) but that which is referred to appears to be an open profession of his name, to the renouncing of every thing that stood in competition with him. It was therefore true of "as many as had been baptized," whether they abode in the truth or not. And even their being "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus," seems to express what they were in profession, rather than what they were in fact. They had by their baptism disowned all dependance on the privileges of birth, and the adoption which pertained to them as the children of Abraham; declared their acquiescence in that power, or privilege, to become the sons of God, which the gospel imparts to them that believe. The mention of this was perfectly in point, as it greatly heightened the evil of their defection. The amount is, That as many as were baptized in the primitive ages were voluntary agents, and submitted to this ordinance for the purpose of making a solemn and practical profession of the Christian faith. It was their oath of allegiance to the King of Zion; that by which they avowed the Lord to be their God. Hence a rejection of it involved "a rejection of the counsel of God." (Luke vii. 30.) The sin of the Pharisees and lawyers consisted not in their refusing to submit to baptism as unbelievers; but in embracing the Messiah, and so putting on the badge of his profession. Their rejection of the sign was justly construed as a rejection of the thing signified; as when a rebel refuses to take the oath of allegiance, it is construed as a refusal of submission and subjection to his rightful prince.

Such, brethren, is the profession we have made. We have not only declared in words, our repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; but have said the same things by our baptism. We have solemnly surrendered ourselves up to Christ, taking him to be our prophet, priest, and king; engaging to receive his doctrine, to rely on his atonement, and to obey his laws. The vows of God are upon us. We have even sworn to keep his righteous judgments; and, without violating the oath of God, cannot go back. If it be a sin not to confess the Lord Jesus, through fear or shame, it is a still greater sin after we have confessed him, to turn from the holy commandment

The religion of Jesus consists partly of truths to be believed, and partly of precepts to be obeyed; and the ordinance of baptism furnishes motives for a faithful adherence to both.

We have been baptized "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit;" and have thus practically avowed our belief in them. It was at Jordan that the Father bore witness to his well-beloved Son, and that the Holy Spirit descended upon him; hither, therefore, in the early ages, men were directed to repair, that they might learn the doctrine of the trinity. If we relinquish this doctrine, we virtually relinquish our baptism. Of this there need not be a more convincing proof than the inclination which has been discovered by those who have renounced the doctrine, to disuse the form of baptizing in the name of the Sacred Three.

We have also professed by our baptism to embrace that great salvation which is accomplished by the united influence of the Sacred Three. We have in effect declared our acquiescence in the freeness of the Father's grace, in the all-sufficient atonement of the Son, and in the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit: for these are the principal things by which, in the New Testament account of the economy of grace, each is distinguished. Nor can we renounce them, without virtually renouncing our baptism.

The immersion of the body in water, which is a purifying element, contains a profession of our faith in Christ, through the shedding of whose blood we are cleansed from all sin. Hence, baptism in the name of Christ is said to be "for the remission of sins." (Acts ii. 38. xxii. 16.) Not that there is any such virtue in the element, whatever be the quantity; nor in the ceremony, though of Divine appointment: but it contains a sign of the way in which we must be saved. Sin is washed away in baptism in the same sense as Christ's flesh is eaten, and his blood drank, in the Lord's supper; the sign, when rightly used, leads to the thing signified. Remission of sin is ascribed, by Peter, not properly to baptism; but to the name in which the parties were to be baptized. Thus also Saul was directed to "wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Nearly akin to this is the idea conveyed to us in the first epistle of Peter: "The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto baptism doth now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (1 Peter iii. 20, 21.) The salvation of Noah and his family by the ark was a figure of our salvation by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The ark for a time was surrounded, as it were, with waters from above, and from beneath: but it survived its trial, and those who were in it were at length brought safe to land. Christ also for a time sustained the deluge of wrath due to our sins; but survived the trial, rising triumphantly from the dead, and thereby saved us from everlasting death. Of this great transaction baptism is a like figure. It is another sign of the same thing. The resemblance of baptism by immersion to the death and resurrection of Christ, and the suitableness of one to signify our faith in the other, are manifest. It is thus that baptism doth now save us. not as putting away the filth of the flesh; (for all the virtue contained in the ordinance itself is "the answer of a good conscience toward God") but as affording a sign of our salvation by the victorious resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

And as we are taught by our baptism to adhere to the doctrine of God our Saviour, so we are furnished with motives to adorn it by a holy conversation. Thus it is introduced in the epistles to the Romans and Colossians as a sign of our being dead, and buried, to the principles and pursuits of the present world; and, by faith in Christ, raised as into a new world. (Romans vi. 3—12. Col. ii. 12.) The death of Christ is emphatically mentioned as that into which we are baptized—"Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ died, and was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Christ's dying for sin afforded a most powerful motive for our dying to it; and the immersion of the body in baptism, being "in the likeness" of the former, furnishes an additional motive to the latter.

The leading idea suggested by a death and burial seems to be that of separation from the world. There is no greater line of separation than that which is drawn between the dead and the living. The dead know not any thing; and have no portion in all that is done under the sun. Such is the line which is drawn by the faith of the operation of God, between the world renewed and the world depraved; of which, baptism is the appointed sign. If, after this, we are found among evil doers, we may well be considered and shunned as a kind of apparitions, which have no proper concern in the affairs of mortals.

The apostle applied this reasoning against a conformity to abrogated ceremonies. "If ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances?" (Col. ii. 20.) The same reasoning is applicable to other things. If we be dead with Christ, why, as though living, are we subject to the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, which are of the world? Why are any of us conformed to this world; and not rather transformed by the renewing of our minds? If we be dead, and our life be hid with Christ in God; why are not our affections set on things above, and not on things on the earth? We cannot but express our concern, that persons professing godliness should be carried away by the course of this world, as many are; meanly imitating the ungodly; whose conduct they ought rather to reprove. Such imitation, so far as it operates, contains a virtual renunciation of our baptism. The ideas of baptism and a separation from the world, whether connected by us or not, are strongly associated in the minds of men in general. After this, we cannot unite with them in evil, without drawing upon ourselves their most pointed censures. They may labour to seduce us for the sake of comforting themselves; and while accomplishing their purpose may suppress their private thoughts of us, and even compliment us for our liberality: but if we comply, their pretended esteem will be turned into reproach. Nor ought we to consider this as an evil; but rather as a mercy. God hath hereby set a hedge about us, which tends more than a little to preserve us from temptation. If any think otherwise, and feel uneasy that they cannot act like other men, without drawing upon themselves the censures of mankind, it is a dark sign that their hearts are not right in the sight of God.

Nor is this ordinance adapted merely to separate between believers and unbelievers, individually considered: its design is also to draw a line of distinction between the kingdom of Christ, and the kingdom of Satan. Whatever may be said of baptism, as it is now generally understood and practised, and of the personal religion of those who practise it, it was originally appointed to be the boundary of visible Christianity. This is a principle, which, if properly acted upon, would go far to prevent the confounding of the church and the world; and which, consequently, tends more than any thing of the kind to counteract ecclesiastical degeneracy and corruption. Had the Christian church in all ages admitted none to baptism, from whomsoever descended, but those who professed to repent and believe the gospel, it is scarcely conceivable that any others would have been admitted to the Lord's supper: and if so, a stream of corruption which has actually deluged it with antichristianism, would have been diverted at the spring-head. The church might indeed have been corrupted from other causes, but these would have been merely accidental. Hypocrites and formalists might have imposed themselves upon it, as they did in some degree in the apostolic age; but they would have been intruders. Whatever of this kind might have existed, believers could not have been constitutionally yoked together with unbelievers. The carnal descendants of godly people could not have claimed a place in Christ's visible kingdom. The church could not have become national, embracing as its children all who are born in a Christianized country, without any profession of personal religion. Princes and nobles, if worthy, would have been received into its communion as brethren; but not as rulers or patrons: and if unworthy, refused; even though an exposure to persecution had been the consequence—But if persons be admitted to baptism without any profession of personal religion, or upon the profession of others on their behalf, their admission to the Lord's supper will in most cases follow as a matter of course. Indeed it ought to follow: for though amongst evangelical dissenters these things are separated, yet from the beginning it was not so. Neither scripture nor the practice of the ancient churches affords a single example of a baptized person, unless his conduct was grossly immoral, being ineligible to communion. And if all who are now baptized, be admitted to the supper, the line of separation will be broken; the church will be no longer "a garden enclosed:" but an open wilderness, where every beast of prey can range at pleasure. Thus, indeed, it was foretold it should be. The writer of the Apocalypse, describing the corruptions which should prevail in the visible church during the twelve hundred and sixty years' reign of antichrist, represents it under the form of the outer court of the temple being left out of the measurement as profane, and given to the Gentiles to be trodden under foot, in like manner as the holy place and holy city had been trodden down by the heathen, in the time of Antiochus.

As the principle of believers' baptism, properly acted upon, would prevent the admission of all unconverted characters, except hypocrites and self-deceivers, so it would have its influence in repelling them. The habits of some hypocritical characters, it is true, would render it an easy thing to overleap this boundary; but it is equally true, that, to others, it would be an effectual bar. There are not a few in the religious world, who would like well to be members of a Christian church, especially where the pastor is a man of respectability, provided they could be admitted without drawing upon themselves the laugh of the irreligious. There is reason to believe that many persons of genteel connexions, who wish to be thought religious, and whose consciences approve of believers' baptism, are withheld by this kind of shame from offering themselves to our churches. An ordinance which thus operates, possesses a mark of its pertaining to that kingdom which is "not of this world," and into which it is "hard for a rich man to enter."

As the leading idea suggested by a death and burial is that of separation from the world, so the principal thing denoted by a resurrection is an entrance into a new state of being. Such is that "newness of life," of which the emersion of the body from the waters of baptism is a sign, and to which it furnishes an important motive. The religion of Jesus does not consist in mere negatives. It is not enough that we be dead to the world: we must be alive to God. With real Christians, old things are passed away, and all things are become new. Unless our baptism, therefore, be merely a sign, or an unmeaning ceremony, our hopes, fears, sorrows, joys, companions, principles, and pursuits are opposite to those of this world. Even a partial return to it is inconsistent with our baptismal vows. If those who profess to be dead to the world cannot walk in the course of it, without being considered and shunned as a kind of apparitions; those who are alive from the dead cannot return, without resembling a living character who should take up his abode in a sepulchre.

A few general reflections will conclude this epistle.

The baptism of a number of serious Christians is an interesting and impressive spectacle. Often on such solemn occasions, have we witnessed the falling tear; not only from the parties baptized, and others immediately connected with them, but from indifferent spectators. We could appeal to the consciences of many serious Christians, whether they did not receive their first convictions of the reality of religion at such opportunities? We could appeal to all of you who have been in the habit of attending the administration of this ordinance, whether it has not frequently furnished you with the most solemn and tender reflections? Has not the sight of a number of young Christians, offering themselves willingly to the Lord, touched the secret springs of holy sensibility? Yes: you have been reminded by it of your own solemn engagements, and led to inquire in what manner they have been fulfilled. You have remembered the days of your espousals, when you first went after your Saviour, as in the wilderness, and have been sweetly impelled to renew the solemn surrender. Nor have your reflections been confined to yourselves: you have considered these new accessions to the church of God as supplying the place of others that were taken away, and as fulfilling the promise, "Instead of thy fathers, shall be thy children." Thus, when the ranks of an army in a besieged city are thinned by repeated engagements, and the hearts of survivors are ready to faint, a reinforcement arrives: a body of new companions throw themselves in to its relief, and inspire them with new vigour.

Further: If the foregoing remarks be just, the importance of believers' baptism must appear in a very different light, from that in which some have represented it. If the ordinary acknowledgments of many who live in the neglect of this ordinance, and disapprove of the zeal of others who submit to it, may be considered as expressive of their principles, their conduct is not owing to a solid conviction, arising from impartial inquiry accompanied with prayer, that it is unscriptural, or that they have already been baptized according to the institution of Christ; but to a notion that it is of little or no account. If it be of little or no account to bind ourselves to the Lord, in the way of his own prescribing; to confess his name before men; to avow our being dead to the world, and alive to him; to preserve the church from being constitutionally corrupted, and yoked together with unbelievers; to obey his commandments who saith, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you:" and to follow his example who yielded obedience to this institute, saying, "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness"—then may this excuse be admitted. But if these things be important, then is believers' baptism important; and all attempts to depreciate it are offensive in the sight of him who is the Lord and Lawgiver of Zion.

Finally, brethren, it becomes us to beware lest that which is good in itself should, through the corruption of our nature, become an occasion of evil. There is perhaps no temptation more common among religious people, than to think too highly of themselves on account of their advantages. Where such a spirit is cherished, baptism may become an idol, and the table of the Lord itself a snare. It is more than possible that some may so value themselves on account of their baptism, as to make it a substitute for a life of holiness and universal righteousness. It appears that some amongst the Corinthians approached too near, at least, to this spirit. They had been baptized,—they had eaten and drank at the table of the Lord,—yet they trifled with idolatry, and worldly lusts. “I would not that ye should be ignorant (saith Paul) how all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual rock which followed them, and that rock was Christ. But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness.—These things were our examples.—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall!” (1 Cor. x.) As if he had said, ‘Are you members of a community which hath the promised presence of Christ? Our fathers also were under the cloud. Hath God interposed in your favour? They passed through the sea, as on dry land. Have you been baptized? So where they. They descended in a body into the sea; were buried, as it were, by the cloud above them, and the waters on each hand of them; and afterwards ascended on the other side. Have you been admitted to the holy supper? They also ate of that food, and drank of that stream, the spiritual intent of which was much the same. Yet all this afforded them no security, when they provoked the Divine jealousy. Notwithstanding these privileges they fell, and were destroyed of the destroyer. These things are recorded for our admonition.’—Of what account then will our baptism be to us, if instead of being dead to the world and alive to God, we be the reverse? Will baptism save us? No: it will bear witness against us!

And though we may not fall into so fatal an error, as to substitute baptism in the place of holiness, righteousness, and godliness; yet if we cherish a fond conceit of ourselves, magnifying our advantages, to the neglect of a spirit of humble watchfulness; our baptism, instead of aiding us, will become a snare. We do not always act up to our advantages. It is very possible that Christians who are behind us in this particular, may, notwithstanding, be before us in their general character. It were vain and foolish to imagine, that our possessing the truth in one instance, will secure us from error in every other; or that our fulfilling this command of Christ, however important, will ensure a course of universal obedience.

Let us never forget that, however adapted this or that ordinance, form, or mode of church government, may be to promote our spiritual interests, yet if we rest in the means, they will deceive us; or rather, we shall deceive ourselves. It is the presence of Christ only that can keep us alive, either as individuals, or as churches. While, therefore, we recommend the means which he hath prescribed, we devoutly add, with the apostle, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all!" Amen.

TERMS OF COMMUNION.

Circular Letter of the Hudson River Association, 1824.

Dearly Beloved Brethren,—In accordance with a resolution passed at our last annual meeting, “THE TERMS OF COMMUNION,” will claim your attention, as the subject of our present circular address. It is to be regretted that the signs of the times should ever indicate the expediency of presenting this subject to your consideration, in a controversial shape; but since necessity is laid upon us, we desire to enter upon its investigation with all that alacrity which the love of revealed truth, and supreme regard for Zion’s King, and unyielding attachment to the order of his house, are calculated to inspire.

The phrase “communion,” or “fellowship,” is used in different senses in the sacred writings. It frequently denotes that holy enjoyment of the divine presence, and that soul-comforting participation of the Redeemer’s fulness, which it is the privilege of believers to realize. The saints are joined to the Lord by one Spirit; they draw water out of the wells of salvation; God is their dwelling-place in all generations; and it is therefore said, truly their fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. This fellowship does not necessarily stand connected with church government or relationship; it is neither confined to time nor place, nor does it bend to the control of earthly circumstances. It is felt by Jacob with a stone for his pillow; it drives away the fears and pains of the thief upon the cross; it cheers the hearts of Paul and Silas, though beaten with many stripes and thrust into the inner prison; and it converts the desolate Isle of Patmos into a paradise of heavenly rapture. The terms of this communion, all centre in the rich and distinguishing grace of God.

The expression is sometimes used in a large and comprehensive sense, to describe that fraternal affection and spiritual intercourse, which all those who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity and truth, may righteously maintain with each other. Individuals attached to the different denominations of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Quakers, &c. may have good reason to entertain a favourable opinion of each other's Christian exercises; they may unite their efforts to multiply and distribute copies of the Bible, and send the gospel of salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth; they may take sweet counsel together, and be mutual helpers of each others' joy; and their communion will be proportioned to the evidence which the parties furnish, of maintaining a close walk with God. If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another. But as this fellowship in the Gospel is enjoyed by individual believers who never unite with a particular church; as it exists in different degrees, according to the strength of their confidence that God has begun a good work in the heart, without any reference to the ordinances or regulations of his house, it is an entirely different thing from church fellowship, and is by no means to be confounded therewith.

In modern phraseology the word "Communion," is employed, by common consent, as expressive of that fellowship which experimental Christians have with the Saviour of sinners, and with one another, in the ordinance of the Lord's supper; and this use of the phrase seems to be justified by the Apostle's language, 1 Cor. x. 16, The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? The single point, therefore, which we have now before us is, to answer the inquiry, What are the indispensable terms of this communion? or, in other words, what prerequisites of admission to the Lord's supper are marked out, in the New Testament, for the observance of the churches of Christ to the end of the world? To this inquiry we reply, regeneration, baptism, and a conversation such as becometh the Gospel of Christ; and in proof of the correctness of this reply, we appeal to the law and to the testimony.

The children of God are bound to give thanks always to their Heavenly Father, because he hath from the beginning chosen them to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, whereunto they are called by the Gospel; and THEN, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; and to manifest their attachment to the laws, doctrines, and ordinances, once delivered to the saints. The primitive churches, constituted under the immediate direction of the inspired apostles, were composed of self-condemned sinners, who were by nature children of wrath even as others; but being pricked in their hearts and quickened by the Spirit of God, fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the Gospel. They believed the testimony given of God's dear Son, and having gladly received the truth, were baptized both men and women. To the first Gospel church in Jerusalem it is said, the Lord added daily such as should be saved, and they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. The church at Corinth consisted of those who were sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, and who called upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. The members of the church at Colosse, had put off the old man with his deeds, and put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: and the brethren at Rome, were the called of Jesus Christ, beloved of God, called to be saints. Now if these apostolic churches were erected upon correct principles, (and who so contumacious or schismatic as to deny it?) they are certainly to us infallible guides, and present us with a perfect pattern. If they received only such as professed to be born of God, and gave evidence that they were begotten again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, we should imitate their example; and if there come any unto us and bring not this doctrine, we are commanded not to receive him into our house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed; that is, "he that welcometh to the privileges of the church, him that abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, is partaker of his evil deeds. It is therefore an established principle in Baptist churches to require of all candidates for admission, a declaration of what God hath done for their souls; and when satisfactory evidence of a change of heart is exhibited, the first scriptural term of communion, is elicited by the church. Should this fundamental principle ever be abandoned, we hesitate not to say, the fine gold will become dim, the glory will depart from us, and the vengeance of Him who walketh in the midst of the golden candlesticks may be justly apprehended.

That Baptism is a "Term of Communion," is manifest from the design and order of that ordinance, as well as from the uniform practice of the apostles.

It is the design of Baptism, among other important particulars, to exhibit the existence of a new relationship, and to declare to all around, the interesting fact, that the individual baptized has come out from the world, and enlisted under the banner of Christ. In this view of the subject, it is not merely the answer of a good conscience towards God, but it is also a grateful and public recognition of that grand line of distinction which the Redeemer has established between the kingdom of darkness, and that kingdom which is not of this world. For as many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. Gal. iii. 27. Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Rom. vi. 4. As it is evident that a man must enter into the kingdom, before he can be entitled to the immunities of a subject; that he must be received into the fellowship of a particular church, before he can enjoy the privileges of that church; even so, it is equally plain, that Baptism, upon profession of faith in the Messiah, must remain an indispensable term of communion, until it can be proved that unbaptized persons were added to the churches planted by the apostles in different parts of the world. And this will appear yet more abundantly if we consider,—

The order which is uniformly observed in the New Testament, with reference to Baptism and the Lord's Supper. When the Great Head of the church sent forth his ministering servants to build up his kingdom in our ruined world, he gave them commission in the following words:—Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,—teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. This language is lucid and definite. It directed them first to teach, or, as it is elsewhere expressed, to preach the Gospel to every creature. When the word preached was accompanied by an unction from the Holy One, men were made wise unto salvation; they were effectually taught; they were made disciples; and then, and not till then, were the apostles commanded to baptize them. After this, they were to instruct them to observe all things enjoined upon them by the Saviour; and among the all things, who dare deny to the Lord's supper a place? Since the Redeemer has sufficient wisdom to devise the most suitable ordinances, either for the comfort of his people, or as a test of their obedience; and since all power is given him to make laws in Zion, and fix the order of their observance; to his authority all Christians should certainly submit. But it is plain that baptism must precede the communion, not only because the Lord Christ hath so decreed, but because this order is necessary in the very nature of things, if there be an adaptation of the sign to the thing signified. We must first be made alive, before we need bread to sustain life; and in like manner. the ordinance which shadows forth the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, must of necessity, go before that which holds out to us in a figure the bread which came down from heaven, whereof if a man eat, he shall live for ever. That this statement is correct, we most assuredly gather from the unvarying practice of the Apostles themselves.

The preaching of Peter, upon a certain notable occasion, produced such an astonishing effect that thousands cried out, Men and brethren what shall we do to be saved? The preacher promptly replies, Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. What follows? They that gladly received the word WERE BAP-

RIZED. After baptism they were added to the church in Jerusalem, and then, participated in the communion, or the breaking of bread.

The conduct of Paul was precisely similar to that of his brother Peter. He came to Corinth, and taught the word of God among its inhabitants. Many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized. These baptized believers were then constituted into a gospel church, and kept the ordinance of the Lord's Supper as delivered to them by the Apostle. Acts xviii. 1 Cor. ii. 2. If therefore, the uniform practice of the Apostles justly challenges our imitation, we must inviolably adhere to the order which they have established.

The last term of church communion we have named, is a godly walk and conversation; and this position is easily maintained, both upon the principles of reason and revelation. The children of God are holy brethren: a royal priesthood—a peculiar people, zealous of good works. This description of them is given by one who cannot err; and it would certainly be incongruous and unnatural for such persons to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers. How can two walk together except they be agreed? What communion hath light with darkness, and what fellowship hath Christ with Belial? are questions which need no comment;—they answer themselves. In extending the right hand of fellowship, therefore, a church must be satisfied that the individual soliciting admission has scriptural views of himself, and of God, and of the way of salvation by Christ alone, and of the work of the Spirit, and of the holy tendency of divine truth; and hence we are directed to mark and avoid those whose erroneous sentiments cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which we have learned. Rom. xvi. Moreover the candidate for church communion must not only converse about the things of God in a proper manner, but his deportment must correspond with his holy profession. If any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, we must not keep company with such an one, no not to eat. 1 Cor. v. 11. and that course of conduct which cuts off from the church one who is already a member, must be, by parity of reasoning, an insurmountable obstacle against admission to its privileges.

Our sentiments with reference to the terms of communion, have, in different ages and countries, occasioned the opprobrious epithets of "bigoted, uncharitable, self-righteous," &c. to be heaped upon us with an unsparing hand; but these are weak and powerless weapons when employed against those who are armed with the sword of the Spirit, in defence of a divine institution. We shall close this epistle by replying briefly to some of the most plausible objections which are constantly urged against the sentiments we have advanced.

First objection. "You lay too much stress upon baptism by making it an indispensable term of communion."

To this we reply;—We pay no greater regard to it, nor do we give it a higher place in our system, than the Lord Christ hath enjoined, or the Apostles and primitive Christians, by their example, have warranted. And here we may ask, why should more stress be laid upon the Lord's supper than upon baptism; and why should many professing Christians so earnestly advocate the observance of the former, while they pervert, or entirely neglect the latter? Were not both ordinances instituted by the same Lord, and do they not, therefore, come to us clothed with the same authority? We know that Pædobaptists are in the habit of calling baptism a non-essential; an external rite; a mere ceremony; &c. If this be true, we would inquire, what more is the supper? Is it a Saviour? But if these sacred institutions, be indeed, as we believe, signs of important and essential truths, baptism is unquestionably as significant as the breaking of bread, and exhibits, emblematically, a large proportion of the distinguishing doctrines of the gospel. Upon an investigation of the New Testament, we find that baptism, of the two, is much the more frequently mentioned, and baptized believers are affectionately and repeatedly exhorted, so to walk in Christ Jesus their Lord, as in that ordinance they have put him on. Taking then the Holy Book as our only and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, we have the highest authority for saying, We give to baptism, which Christ appointed as the first gospel institute, as a test of his children's obedience, and a lively emblem of their renewal by the Holy Ghost, exactly the situation which the master of the house has designated; and with a thus saith the Lord sounding in our ears and penetrating our hearts, it is not possible that we should listen to the doctrines or commandments of men.

A second objection, charges us with causing a separation between the children of the same Heavenly Father.

Suppose we grant that baptism is an insuperable barrier in the way of our communing, in church capacity, with unbaptized persons; does it necessarily result from this concession, that the blame righteously attaches itself to the skirts of our garments? Shall those who understand and keep the ordinances, in their nature, order, and design, as they were originally delivered to the churches, be condemned? and those who depart from them, and embrace a “figment of their own imagination,” be justified? God forbid! We hesitate not to say, most explicitly, that baptism is a separating line, but it is one of the Lord’s own making, and we endeavour constantly, both by preaching and example, to enlighten the minds of our Pædobaptist friends on the subject. We warn them of their errors; we hold up to them the truth; we point them definitely to chapter and verse; and we exhort every believer among them, quite as often as they wish to hear us, to arise and be baptized and wash away their sins, (in a figure,) calling upon the name of the Lord.—We are honest and sincere in these declarations, and in making them thus plainly, it must be evident to the candid and judicious, that we cannot have any by-ends, or measures of mere expediency to promote. We wish the truth, and the truth alone as it is in Jesus, every where to prevail; and we are grieved in heart, that those whom we respect and love on so many other accounts, should, in this particular, persist in treading the pathway of disobedience, boldly rejecting the counsel of God in not being baptized according to his commandment. If our veracity and Christian affection, touching this whole matter, be unjustly called in question, we are permitted to adopt the language of a Baptist, and say: Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward. 2 Cor. i. 12.

A third objection states, that it is the Lord's table, and therefore we have no right to hinder those who wish to approach it.

That it is the Lord's table, is the appropriate and sufficient answer to this objection. Were it ours, we might cheerfully admit to it the objector and his friends; but since it is confessedly the Lord's table, we dare welcome to it only such as HE invites. The disciples were baptized before Christ instituted and administered to them the supper. John the Baptist was sent to prepare a people for the Lord, and the disciples were evidently among the number of those who justified God; and if so, they must have been necessarily baptized with the baptism of John; otherwise they could not have been obedient hearers and doers of the word, and imitators of the example of their Lord and master. Luke vii. 29. Mat. iii. 23, 17. 1 Peter, ii. 21. In perfect conformity with this view of the subject, are the words of Peter: Wherefore of these men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. Acts, i. 21, 22 Here we learn that Peter and his brethren began their Christian profession at the baptism of John, and hence the inference is irresistible, that there were none but Baptists with our Lord when he gave them the bread and cup, and said, Do this in remembrance of me. As the sacred oracles, therefore, uniformly teach that Christians, in the Apostles' days, were baptized before they came together in one place for the breaking of bread, we are confirmed in the sentiment, that the only guests invited to partake of this feast are such as have been, upon profession of their faith, buried with Christ in baptism; nor can we approach the table with the unbaptized, without acting in direct opposition to the precept and example of Him, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

A fourth objection is presented in this shape: We conscientiously believe ourselves to be baptized; you are not the judge; to our own master we stand or fall.

This objection brings us at once to the question, What is Christian baptism? Is it sprinkling, or is it pouring? With the New Testament in our hands, we most confidently and unhesitatingly answer, neither. It is immersion in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. And here we cannot but say to our cavilling friend, when were you baptized? "In infancy." Are unconscious babes, or the unbelieving, unprofessing seed of pious parents, proper subjects of baptism? Whether men will hear or whether they will forbear, upon the testimony of God we are obliged to answer, no.—These things were not so in the beginning; for it is written, Then they that gladly received the word were baptized; Acts 2. And the Jailor was baptized, he and all his, straightway, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house. Acts xvi. Consequently those who believe and rejoice in Christ Jesus are, according to the Scriptures, the only persons to whom we are authorized to administer the ordinance of baptism. But we are told that whether Pædobaptists have perverted christian baptism, both in its design and subjects, or not, we have no right to judge. This is equivalent to saying that an individual ought to be admitted to church fellowship because he thinks himself entitled to that privilege, without reference to the opinion which the church may entertain upon the subject. It requires no argument to prove the absurdity of this position. To adopt it would speedily ultimate in the dissolution of any society.—That there must be an agreement in sentiment between a church and a candidate for admission to its privileges; and that the church must necessarily judge of the candidate's qualifications, are both self-evident and scriptural truths. Since Christ then has commanded us to hold fast till he come, and to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, we are under the most sacred obligations to exhort one another daily; to warn the unruly; to look diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; and to be very careful, not only to venerate his institutions ourselves, but also that they be observed in their purity, by all such as solicit communion with us at the table of the Lord.

A fifth objection, viz. That the saints will all commune together in Heaven, and ought therefore to do so on earth, is thought to be a very strong one, but really we are not able to perceive its force. We rejoice in the anticipation of that perfect union and uninterrupted fellowship, which the general assembly and church of the first born, whose names are written in Heaven, shall, to all eternity, enjoy; but whatever may be the terms of communion in the world of glory, we are fully persuaded that while here, the revealed will of Christ, and not what shall take place after death, should be the only man of our counsel, a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path; and we are equally certain, that when we see Jesus as he is, and love him as we ought, the least of his commandments will not be esteemed either trifling or nonessential.

The last objection which our limits will allow us to notice, supposes that strict communion is inconsistent with brotherly love and Christian forbearance.

By adverting to the distinction made in the commencement of this letter, between communion with God, our fellow-christians, and a particular church, this objection will be stripped of all its difficulties. It will there be seen that real believers may hold converse with the Deity, and love each other as brethren in the Lord, without walking together in church relationship. The Baptists differ from all others in their views of a Gospel Church, and the scriptural qualifications for admission to its privileges; but these views we believe to be coincident with the directions of the Saviour, and the example of Apostles and primitive Christians, and having maintained them in the face of persecution, danger, and death, from the days of Paul to the present moment, we cannot abandon them, until convinced that we have hitherto misapprehended altogether the language of the New Testament. Nor can this course of conduct be righteously construed into a breach of brotherly love and Christian forbearance, until it can be proved that we ought to love men more than we love God, and that the charity which rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in THE TRUTH, requires us to disregard the commandments and dispense with the ordinances of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Finally, brethren, Farewell! Adhere steadfastly to the doctrines and ordinances of Christ, as he hath delivered them to us; and as there is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, so we beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. The Lord be with you all. Amen.

A PERSUASIVE TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP; OR,
THE DUTY OF BELIEVERS TO MAKE A PUBLIC PROFESSION OF RELIGION.

THERE are many individuals, who appear to have received the truth in love, and whose conduct in other respects is such as becomes the gospel, but who live in the habitual neglect of its positive institutions. For real or avowed unbelievers to do this, would occasion no surprise; but that those, who profess to love our Lord Jesus Christ, and who cherish the hope of eternal life through him, should thus seem to disregard his authority, is not a little surprising, and may well be considered as one of the peculiarities of the present state of religion amongst us. Nothing of this kind appeared in the times of the apostles. Converts to Christianity were recognized by an open profession of the name of Christ, and admission to the fellowship of the church. The ardour of primitive believers admitted of no hesitation or delay: they never stopped to inquire how little they might do for Christ, and yet go to heaven; nor thought of reckoning this or the other ordinance not essential to salvation: but, burning with love to the Redeemer, and zeal for his righteous cause, they made haste, and delayed not to keep his commandments. No sooner was Saul converted, than he essayed to join himself to the disciples. Anticipating the pleasure that would result from an obedience to the divine command, and desirous of being numbered amongst the followers of the Lamb, the Eunuch, on believing that Jesus was the Son of God, exclaimed, with an agreeable surprise, See, water! what doth hinder me to be baptized? The Philippian Jailer, believing in God, with all his house, was baptized, he and all his straight-way, even the same hour of the night in which Paul had spoken to them the word of the Lord. When the Samaritans believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. In those times, as many as gladly received the word, were baptized; and continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. But how different is all this from the reluctance and supineness of professors in later times, who seem glad of any plea that may exempt them from obligation, or extenuate their remissness in respect to an open profession of the name of Christ, and a practical submission to the institutions of his church! For a change so novel in the visible state of Christianity, we are led to inquire the cause; and as a means of correcting so prevalent an evil, to point out the importance of gospel fellowship, as binding upon the followers of Christ.

First, Let us inquire THE REASONS WHY THOSE WHO PROFESS TO BELIEVE IN CHRIST FOR SALVATION, LIVE IN THE NEGLECT OF CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

It will be readily apprehended, that, by Fellowship in the Gospel, something more is meant than a friendly intercourse with individual Christians, or a stated attendance on the solemnities of the Sabbath; that it relates to that state of union peculiar to a Christian society which includes a public profession of the name of Christ, and a solemn engagement to walk together in all his commandments and ordinances blameless. It is of the neglect of these important duties that we complain, and would now attempt to suggest a few hints tending to remove the impediments which may lie in the way.

There may be some amongst us, who, while their general conduct is such as entitles them to some respect, are, nevertheless, conscious of living in some known sin, and who may, therefore, feel it necessary to decline any immediate connexion with the church of God—Certainly, where this is the case, we do not solicit any association with them; but would rather exhort such persons to confess and forsake their sins, that they may find mercy. The fellowship of Christians is of a holy nature: it is a fellowship with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ: they have intercourse with God as the moral governor of the world, through Jesus the Mediator; their object is to carry on the cause of truth and righteousness, to promote the Redeemer's glory, and mutually to labour after a conformity to his will; but it will be impossible to enter into these designs, or contribute to their accomplishment, if sin has dominion over us. There may be much civility, and many expressions of friendship; but where purity of heart and nearness to God are not carefully maintained, there can be none of that Christian tenderness, oneness of spirit, holy freedom, and brotherly affection, in which the communion of saints so much consists. If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. Living in sin, therefore, or having sinned and not repented, not only disqualifies us for the fellowship of Christians on earth, but also renders us unmeet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

Some, though not living in any known or positive sin, may think, nevertheless, that a relation to the church of God would lay them under greater obligations to a strict and holy life than they wish to take upon them, and hence prefer a state of freedom from such restraints. It is allowed that such a connexion does indeed imply the most sacred of all engagements: we covenant to be the Lord's; renouncing all other lords who have had dominion over us, we make mention of his name only. Having named the name of Christ, we are required to depart from all iniquity. Having sworn, we are bound to perform it, that we will keep his righteous judgments. And is it, indeed an object of dread to be bound to Christ and his service, by a solemn surrender of ourselves to him? If there be any amongst us who are of this opinion, we do not immediately invite them to our fellowship; but would rather urge them to inquire, whether their hearts be right in the sight of God? The obligation to universal holiness, though it is directly acknowledged, and in a sense confirmed by an open profession of the name of Christ, yet it does not depend upon any such engagement on our part. Christ's service is not a matter of discretion. Whatever we are or whatever we profess to be, our obligation is radically the same.

It may be pleaded by others, that church-fellowship is not essential to salvation, and that, therefore, we may go to heaven without it. Positive institutions are not, indeed, so essential to salvation, as that it could not in any case be obtained without them; but it does not follow, that, therefore, they are in no case necessary to salvation. We are sure that living in known sin will exclude us from the kingdom of heaven, and, for aught we know, living in the neglect of known duty may do the same. And if it be true, that Christ becomes the author of eternal salvation to all them who OBEY him, a disobedience to his commands may exclude us from an interest in his salvation, as well as a rejection of his truth. But if it were otherwise, and supposing we might go to heaven without attending to church ordinances, yet what selfishness does it discover! What disregard for the authority of Jesus; what want of love to him and zeal for his glory, to live in the neglect of known duty on the presumption that our own salvation may not be endangered by it! Is it lovely, is it worthy of a child and servant of God thus to act? It might suit a professor whose religion is nothing but selfishness; but let such remember that they have not the love of God in them: for this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments.

It is to be feared that some are kept from a public profession of Christ by mere worldly motives. They have some flattering prospects in life, and their temporal interest would suffer by it. They have relations and friends who feel averse to religion, and would be offended at their openly professing it. The fear of being disinherited, or sustaining loss in their worldly circumstances, induces some persons to conceal their principles, in hope that some future opportunity may be more favourable to their avowal, without subjecting them to temporal inconvenience. But this temporising with religion, and treating it as a subordinate concern, is of serious importance; it implies a practical denial of Christ before men, and will, we fear, expose the party, if he die without repentance for it, to a denial by Christ before the Father another day. Lord, said one, I will follow thee; but let me first go and bury my father—Let me first go and bid them farewell who are at home, says another. Jesus answered, let the dead bury their dead:—follow thou me—No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

The dread of reproach is the occasion of preventing some from following the Lord more fully. A general and loose profession of the Christian name is common enough, and to take up with a worldly religion attaches no stigma to its professor; but to enter into the spirit of the gospel, to come out from amongst the common herd of nominal Christians, to be separate, to follow the Lord fully, and to keep his ordinances as they were delivered, will subject us to the charge of singularity, and that not only from the grossly immoral, but also from the devout and honourable. But shall we, therefore, be ashamed of Christ before men, and withhold ourselves from the communion of such as are walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless? If any man be ashamed of me and of my words, saith our Lord, of him will I be ashamed before my Father and the holy angels. Rather let us go forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. He who would please the world, and accommodate his religion to the prevailing taste, undertakes more than he can perform, if he would be the servant of Christ.

“————— Faithful found
 Among the faithless, faithful only he:
 Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
 Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrify'd,
 His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal:
 Nor number, nor example with him wrought
 To swerve from truth.”

MILTON.

Others may be deferring an attendance on divine ordinance still they receive some particular impressions to convince them of their duty.—They think it right for those who love Christ to own and follow him, and are willing to be considered as his friends, only they are waiting at the pool for the moving of the waters, in hope of receiving some kind of extraordinary intimations of the divine will, respecting their immediate duty.—Many persons appear to be looking for something of this sort, and because they do not receive it, conclude it is the mind of God that they should not comply with his ordinances; at least that they should not comply with them at present.—It is allowed, indeed, that impressions are desirable, provided it be truth or duty that is impressed, otherwise they deserve no regard: but let these be as desirable as they may, the want of them can never justify our living in the neglect of known duty. Nor are they at all adapted to show us what is duty, but merely to excite to the performance of what may be proved to be duty without them. If the want of such impressions, or of such a state of mind as we are wishing for in a state of inactivity, would excuse us in the neglect of church fellowship, they would also excuse us in the neglect of other religious duties. But such pleas are highly delusive, and serve only to discover our want of love and zeal in the cause of Christ.

Natural timidity appears to beset some, and keep them back from an open profession of the name of Christ. They feel it desirable to own Christ before men, and are convinced of their obligation so to do; but they are deterred by the publicity of such an engagement, and imagine themselves unable to make a good confession before so many witnesses.—The natural diffidence of some persons may indeed render this very formidable; but it should be remembered that to gain some advantage, or avoid some inconvenience in worldly affairs, such objections are generally overcome: and why should they be deemed insuperable in a matter of far greater importance? Our strength is small indeed, if we faint here. What should we do in times of persecution, when called to confess Christ at the peril of our lives? Our blessed Lord openly avowed our cause in the face of danger: he neither failed, nor was discouraged; but endured the cross, despising the shame. Cold indeed must our hearts be towards him, if we can suffer a few imaginary difficulties to hinder us from owning his righteous cause.

Finally, some are deterred from a compliance with this duty by a fear lest they should not be proper subjects.—It is not owing to any dislike to the ways of the Lord, nor indifference to the glory of Christ, that some amongst us are living in the omission of his ordinances: they regularly attend on the worship of God, manifest good will to the Redeemer's cause, join in social prayer for its prosperity, and are lovers of good men; but fear they are not qualified to fill up a place in the Christian church. The doubts which they entertain of their own personal religion, the supposition that some eminent endowments and a larger degree of Christian experience are necessary to such a connexion, together with the fear of deceiving others, and of being themselves deceived, not only excuse them in their own account from a public profession, but seem to justify and commend them in such a line of conduct. We do not wish to persuade any persons to profess that of which they are not conscious. But if it be indeed a matter of doubt whether they be true Christians, we may be allowed to express our surprise, that they in general discover so little concern about that all-important question. To be walking in such darkness as not to know whither we are going, is far from being desirable; and, if we have any proper sense of things, it must be very painful. And is it really a matter of doubt, whether you be a believer, or an unbeliever; a friend to Christ, or an enemy; whether from your heart you wish well or ill to his kingdom in the world; whether your soul unites with those who love him, or with those who love him not? Remember there is no neutrality here: He, that is not with me, saith Jesus, is against me; and he, that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad. We are either Christ's friends or his enemies; believers, or unbelievers. We either embrace the gospel or reject it. In other cases, we are not at a loss in judging who or what we love and habitually prefer, nor in determining whose side we are of, or to whose interest we feel attached. If our heart be not with Jesus, by no means let us give him our hand; but if it be, even though we may not enjoy the comforts of religion in so great a degree as some other Christians, it becomes us, nevertheless, to express it by an open profession of his name. If with the heart we believe unto righteousness, let us make confession with the mouth unto salvation.

Secondly, We proceed to point out THE IMPORTANCE

OF CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP, AS BINDING UPON THE FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST.

If there were no other considerations to induce us to give up ourselves to a Christian Church, the requirements of our Lord and Saviour ought to be deemed sufficient. Those who pay no practical regard to this duty, generally live in the neglect of the ordinance of Baptism, which Jesus declared was becoming him and his followers; and also of the Supper, which he enjoined upon us when taking his leave of the world. The tenderness of this, his dying request, ought to overwhelm all hesitation, and confound the very idea of delay. That a sinner should ask to be remembered of the Saviour is nothing surprising; for if he forget us, we are entirely undone: but that the Lord of glory should ask to be remembered, and remembered as dying for us, is kind and condescending beyond expression. He who can deny such a request must surely be at a loss to prove himself the friend of Christ: Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

The importance which attaches to individual Christians in uniting with churches, must bear some proportion to the importance of the existence of those churches; for, if it be a matter of small account for any one Christian to unite in fellowship, it may be the same for another, and so for all; which is the same thing as supposing it to be a matter of little consequence whether there be any Christian churches in the world. But Christian society seems to be no less necessary for the advancement of the interest of Christ, than human society is for promoting the interest of man. Where do we ordinarily see the work of conversion carried on, except where a Christian church is established, and the word and ordinances are administered? When Christ ascended up on high, he gave gifts to men; and wherefore? That the Lord God might dwell among them. It is under a social character that Christians are denominated the house or temple of God, in which he deigns to dwell; where his beauty is beheld, and where we inquire after truth. It is the body of Christ, which being fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working of the measure of every part, maketh increase unto the edifying of itself in love. The natural inference from these representations is, that if we have any regard for the interest of Christ, or any desire for walking in fellowship with him, we should surrender ourselves up to him, and to the fellowship of saints according to his will. If we would find the Shepherd, we must go forth by the footsteps of the flock.

We doubt not but that there are godly individuals scattered up and down in the world, who have little or no opportunity of enjoying the fellowship of saints; but it is seldom known that such persons arrive to any considerable eminence in spirituality or usefulness. The eye, or the hand, is singularly useful in the body; but if separated, it would be otherwise. The most honourable member cannot say to the least honourable, and still less to the body, I have no need of thee. And if those who are lawfully prevented, suffer for the want of Christian fellowship, what may be expected of those who voluntarily neglect it? If the Lord in his providence call us to walk alone, we may hope that he will, at least in some measure, make up the loss of public means by a greater blessing on private ones: but if the former be slighted, he will assuredly withdraw his blessing from the latter.

The neglect of positive institutions under the Old Testament, was sometimes punished with temporal judgments. The Lord sought even to slay his servant Moses, for having omitted to circumcise his son in Midian. And probably it is in allusion to the infliction of calamities for such neglects, that it is said in prophecy, Who-so will not come up to the feast of tabernacles, upon them shall be no rain. Under the gospel dispensation, it is God's usual way to punish, not by temporal, but spiritual judgments; and whether the neglect of his ordinances be not generally accompanied with a suspension of spiritual blessings, let experience determine.

The principle from which Christian fellowship arises is love; and this is of so much importance as to be made by the scriptures a test of personal religion. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren: he that loveth not the brethren, abideth in death. But if we love the brethren, we shall desire to be one with them in the tenderest ties; to join them in benevolent labours, to pray and praise with them, to sympathise in their sorrows, and rejoice in their joys; in short, to cast in our lot with them, that whatever good thing the Lord their God may bestow upon them, he may bestow upon us. This is the natural operation of love: and without such a tendency, it cannot be genuine. The renewed heart beats spontaneously after the closest possible union with God and his people. Its language is, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God, my God. Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me! David, even in praying for the salvation of his own soul, did not ask for a separate blessing, but for a share in the portion of the people of God. Remember me O Lord, with the favour which thou bearest to thy people: O visit me with thy salvation: that I may see the good of thy chosen: that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation; that I may glory with thine inheritance!

The simplicity of gospel ordinances must render an inattention to them inexcusable. Under the former dispensation, the positive institutions of religion were numerous and complicated. The distance, also, which the Israelites, and especially the proselytes from among the Gentiles, had to journey at the times of their solemn assemblies, was very great when compared with ours. God required of them great labour and expense, yet the godly amongst them cheerfully complied. And now that he hath brought the bread of life home to us, raining manna, as it were, around our tents, shall we, therefore, make light of it? If the Lord had bid us do some great thing, should we not have done it? Then how much rather, when he saith, "Wash and be clean?"

One of the most interesting ideas given us of the celestial world is that of a state of glorious society. Angels and saints innumerable, ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, vie with each other in love and praise, while every creature in heaven and earth, and under the earth, and in the sea, unite in ascribing blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, unto him who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever. And how are we to be fitted for this blessed state, but by associating with the people of God on earth? Thus we become better prepared for glory. Nay, more: It is thus that we actually partake of it.—By cordially uniting with the friends of Jesus in this world, we unite with the whole family of heaven and earth, which is but one. Hence it is that believers in the present life are represented as already come unto Mount Sion, unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born which are written in heaven, to God the judge of all, to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant.

If these sentiments be properly considered and felt, they will not only stimulate those to prompt obedience, who have hitherto neglected the institutions of Christ, but impress us all with a sense of our great advantages, and cause us to rejoice with trembling. We stand on high ground: we walk as upon the borders of heaven: let us watch and pray, lest we be found cleaving to the earth, notwithstanding these distinguished privileges. Nay, it is not impossible that from these heights some of us may fall, like the inhabitants of Capernaum, into perdition!

Finally, It may not be unprofitable for those of us who are ministers and members of churches to inquire whether the neglect of which we complain may not, in part, be owing to something in us? If a minister be uninterested, and consequently uninteresting in his work; if there be but little savour in his spirit, or profit arising from his communications; if the people be haughty, covetous, self-willed, litigious, and conformed to this world; there will be but little encouragement for young Christians to cast in their lot with them. Or, if none of these evils be remarkably apparent, yet if there be a want of holy affection and free conversation, it will not be much otherwise. It is by our having fellowship with God, that godly minds will be induced to have fellowship with us. We will go with you, say they, for we have heard that God is with you!

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCHES.

WHEN the apostles, by the preaching of the word, had gathered in any place a sufficient number of individuals to the faith of Christ, it was their uniform practice, for the further promotion of his kingdom in that place, to form them into a Religious Society, or Christian Church. Being thus associated in the name of Christ, divine worship was carried on, Christian ordinances observed, holy discipline maintained, and the word of life, as the light by the golden candlesticks, exhibited. Among them our Lord Jesus Christ, as the high priest of our profession, is represented as walking; observing the good, and applauding it; pointing out the evil, and censuring it; and holding up life and immortality to those who should overcome the temptations of the present state.

Let us suppose him to walk amongst our several churches, and to address us as he addressed the seven churches in Asia. We trust he would find some things to approve; but we are also apprehensive that he would find many things to censure. Let us then look narrowly into the Discipline of the primitive churches, and compare ours with it.

By discipline, however, we do not mean to include the whole of the order of a Christian Church; but shall at this time confine our attention to that part of church-government which consists in—A MUTUAL WATCH OVER ONE ANOTHER, AND THE CONDUCT WE ARE DIRECTED TO PURSUE IN CASES OF DISORDER.

A great part of our duty consists in cultivating what is lovely, but this is not the whole of it; we must prune as well as plant, if we would bear much fruit, and be Christ's disciples. One of the things applauded in the church of Ephesus was that they could not bear those who were evil.

Yet we are not to suppose from hence that no irregularity or imperfection whatever, is an object of forbearance. If uniformity be required in such a degree as that every difference in judgment or practice shall occasion a separation, the churches may be always dividing into parties, which we are persuaded was never encouraged by the apostles of our Lord, and cannot be justified in trivial or ordinary cases. A contrary practice is expressly taught us in the Epistle to the Romans; (Chap. xiv.) and the cases in which it is to be exercised are there pointed out. An object of forbearance however must be one that may exist without being an occasion of dispute and wrangling in the church: It must not be to doubtful disputations, ver. 1. it must also respect things which do not enter into the essence of God's kingdom, the leading principles of which are righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. ver. 16, 17. That which does not subvert the gospel of the kingdom, nor set aside the authority of the king, though it be an imperfection, is yet to be borne with. Finally, it must be something which does not destroy the work of God, or which is not inconsistent with the progress of vital religion in the church, or in one's own soul. ver. 20. In all such cases we are not to judge one another, but every man's conscience is to be his judge. ver. 23.

In attending to those things which are the proper objects of discipline, our first concern should be to see that all our measures are aimed at the good of the party and the honour of God. Both these ends are pointed out in the case of the Corinthian offender. All was to be done that his spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord, and to clear themselves as a church from being partakers of his sin. If these ends be kept in view they will preserve us from much error; particularly, from the two great evils into which churches are in danger of falling, false lenity, and unchristian severity. There is often a party found in a community, who, under the name of tenderness, are for neglecting all wholesome discipline; or if this cannot be accomplished, for delaying it to the utmost. Such persons are commonly the advocates for disorderly walkers, especially if they be their particular friends or relations. Their language is, "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone. My brother hath fallen to-day, and I may fall to-morrow." This spirit, though it exists only in individuals, provided they be persons of any weight or influence, is frequently known to impede the due execution of the laws of Christ; and if it pervade the community, it will soon reduce it to the lowest state of degeneracy. Such for a time was the spirit of the Corinthians; but when brought to a proper sense of things, what carefulness it wrought in them, yea what clearing of themselves, yea what indignation, yea what fear, yea what vehement desire, yea what zeal, yea what revenge. In opposing the extreme of false tenderness, others are in danger of falling into unfeeling severity. This spirit will make the worst of every thing, and lead men to convert the censures of the church into weapons of private revenge. Persons of this description know not of what manner of spirit they are. They lose sight of the good of the offender. It is not love that operates in them; for love worketh no evil. The true medium between these extremes is a union of mercy and truth. Genuine mercy is combined with faithfulness, and genuine faithfulness with mercy; and this is the only spirit that is likely to purge iniquity. (Prov. xvi. 6.) Connivance will produce indifference; and undue severity will arm the offender with prejudice, and so harden him in sin: but the love of God and of our brother's soul are adapted to answer every good end. If we love God, like Levi, we shall know no man after the flesh, nor acknowledge our nearest kindred; but shall observe his word and keep his covenant. And if we love the soul of our brother, we shall say, "He is fallen to-day, and I will reprove him for his good: I may fall to-morrow, and then let him deal the same with me." Love is the grand secret of church discipline, and will do more than all other things put together, towards insuring success.

In the exercise of discipline it is necessary to distinguish between faults which are the consequences of sudden temptation, and such as are the result of premeditation and habit. The former requires a compassionate treatment; the latter a greater portion of severity. The sin of Peter in denying his Lord was great, and if noticed by the enemies of Christ, might bring great reproach upon his cause; yet, compared with the sin of Solomon it was little. He first gave way to licentiousness; then to idolatry, and on finding that God, as a punishment for his sin, had given ten tribes to Jeroboam, he sought to kill him. Cases like this are immediately dangerous, and require a prompt and decided treatment, and in which hesitating tenderness would be the height of cruelty. "Of some have compassion, making a difference; others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." (Jude 22, 23. See also Gal. vi. 1.)

In all our admonitions regard should be had to the age and character of the party. An elder, as well as other men, may be in fault, and a fault that may require to be noticed; but let him be told of it in a tender and respectful manner. While you expostulate with younger men on a footing of equality, pay a deference to age and office. "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren." (1 Tim. v. 1.)

In the due execution of Christian discipline there are many things to be done by the members of churches individually; and it is upon the proper discharge of these duties that much of the peace and purity of a church depends. If we be faithful to one another there will be but few occasions for public censure. Various improprieties of conduct, neglects of duty, and declensions in the power of godliness, are the proper subjects of pastoral admonition. It is one essential branch of this office to "rebuke and exhort with all long-suffering." (2 Tim. iv. 2.) Nor is this work confined to pastors: Christians are directed to admonish one another. (Rom. xv. 14.) Indeed there are things which a wise and affectionate people will be concerned to take upon themselves, lest a prejudice should be contracted against the ministry, which may prevent its good effects. This is peculiarly necessary in the settling of differences, in which whole families may be interested, and in which it is extremely difficult to avoid the suspicion of partiality.

In all cases of personal offence, the rule laid down by our Lord, in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, ought to be attended to; and no such offence ought to be admitted before a church till the precept of Christ has been first complied with by the party or parties concerned.

In many cases where faults are not committed immediately against us, but which are unknown except to a few individuals, love will lead us to endeavour to reclaim the party if possible, without any further exposure. A just man will not be willing, unnecessarily to make his brother a public example. The scriptures give peculiar encouragement to these personal and private attempts. "If any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." (James v. 19, 20.)

In cases of evil report, where things are said of a brother, in our hearing, which, if true, must affect his character, and the purity of the church, it cannot be right to go on to report it. Love will not lead to this. Many reports we know are unfounded; or if true in the main, they may have been aggravated; or there may be circumstances attending the case, which if fully understood would make things appear very different from the manner in which they have been represented. Now it is almost impossible that any one but the party himself should be acquainted with all these circumstances, or able to give a full account of them. No time therefore should be lost, ere we enquire at the hand of our brother, or if on any consideration we feel that to be unsuitable, it would be proper to apply to an officer of the church, who may conduct it with greater propriety.

There are cases of a more public nature still, in which much of the peace and happiness of a church depends upon the conduct of its members in their individual capacity. The charge given by the apostle to the Romans, (chap. xvi. 17, 18.) though applicable to a church, yet seems to be rather addressed to the individuals who compose it. "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them who cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." The characters to be avoided appear to be persons whose object it is to set up a party in the church, of which they may be the heads or leaders; a kind of religious demagogues. Such men are found, at one time or other, in most societies; and in some cases the peace of the churches has been invaded by strangers, who are not of their own community. Let the "brethren" have their eye upon such men. "Mark them:" trace their conduct, and you will soon discover their motives. Stand aloof from them, and "avoid" striking in with their dividing measures. In case of their being members, the church, collectively considered, ought, no doubt, to put away from amongst them such wicked persons: but as every collective body is composed of individuals, if those individuals suffer themselves to be drawn away, the church is necessarily thrown into confusion, and rendered incapable of a prompt, unanimous, and decided conduct. Let members of churches, therefore, beware how they listen to the insinuations of those who would entice them to join their party. Men of this stamp are described by the apostle, and therefore may be known, particularly by three things—First, by their doctrine; "it is contrary to that which has been learned of Christ." Secondly, by their selfish pursuits: "they serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies." Thirdly, by their insinuating whining pretences of affectionate regard towards their partizans: "by good words and fair speeches they deceive the hearts of the simple."

To this may be added, there are duties on individuals in their behaviour towards persons who lie under the censure of the Church. If they still continue in a state of impenitence, persist in their sin, or be irreconciled to the church's proceedings with them, it is of the utmost consequence that every member should act a uniform part towards them. We may, it is true, continue our ordinary and necessary intercourse with them as men, in the concerns of this life: but there must be no familiarity, no social interchange, no visitings to them, nor receiving visits from them, nothing in short that is expressive of connivance at their conduct.—"If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, we must not keep company with such an one, no not to eat." (1 Cor. v. 11.) If individual members act contrary to this rule, and carry it freely towards an offender, as if nothing had taken place, it will render the censure of the church of none effect. Those persons also who behave in this manner will be considered by the party as his friends, and others who stand aloof as his enemies, or at least as being unreasonably severe:

which will work confusion, and render void the best and most wholesome discipline. We must act in concert, or we may as well do nothing. Members who violate this rule are partakers of other men's sins, and deserve the rebukes of the church, for counteracting its measures.

With respect to those things which fall under the cognizance of a church in its collective capacity, we earnestly recommend in general, that every thing be done not only with a view to the honour of God, and the good of the party, as before observed, but with a special regard to the revealed will of Christ. That some kind of order be preserved, in every community, is necessary to its existence. Decency, reputation, and even worldly policy, will induce us to take some notice of gross immoralities: but this is not Christian discipline: nor will it be productive of its salutary effects. In the choice of officers, few if any churches would elect a profligate: but if opulence be allowed to supply the place of spirituality, or ambitious or litigious characters be preferred on the principle of expediency, as a means of keeping them in better humour, is it not carnal? So, in matters of discipline, few churches would suffer a grossly immoral or litigious character to continue amongst them unnoticed: but if, instead of a calm, impartial and decided procedure, we enter into pusillanimous compromises with the offender, consenting that he should withdraw of his own accord; if the crimes of rich men be either entirely overlooked, or but slightly touched, lest the cause should suffer from their being offended; or if the misconduct of poor men be disregarded, on the ground of their being persons of little or no account, are we not carnal, and walk as men? Brethren! Are there any such things amongst us? Search and consider. Such things ought not to be. The private withdrawment of an individual, if it be without good reason, may justify a church in admonishing him, and, if he cannot be reclaimed, in excluding him: but it cannot of itself dissolve the relation. Till such exclusion has taken place he is a member, and his conduct affects their reputation as much as that of any other member. With regard to a neglect of discipline lest it should injure the cause, what cause must that be which requires to be thus supported? Be it our concern to obey the laws of Christ, and leave him to support his own cause. If it sink by fulfilling his commandments, let it sink. He will not censure us for not supporting the ark with unhallowed hands. And if it be criminal to fear the rich, it cannot be less so to despise the poor. Let brotherly love abound towards both. Do all things without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

We cannot enumerate all the particular cases which fall under the cognizance of a Christian church, but shall mention a few which are recorded in the Scriptures for our imitation.

A DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH OF THE GOSPEL, OR ANY OF ITS LEADING DOCTRINES, is an object of Christian discipline. "I would they were even cut off that trouble you—I have a few things against thee, because thou hast them that hold the doctrine of Balaam—so hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate.—A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject, knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself." (Gal. v. 12. Rev. ii. 14, 15. Tit. iii. 10.)

It is worthy of notice, that the only passage in the New Testament wherein heresy is introduced as an object of discipline, makes no mention of any thing as composing it but what relates to the principles of the party. It may be supposed that those who were accounted heretics by the apostles were as impure in their lives as they were anti-christian in their doctrine, and that they were commonly disturbers of the peace and unity of the churches: but however this might be, neither of these evils are alleged as the reason for which the heretic was to be rejected. All that is mentioned is this: He is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

He is "subverted;" that is, his professed faith in the gospel is in effect overturned, or rendered void; consequently he requires to be treated as an unbeliever. He is "condemned of himself;" that is, the gospel being a consistent whole, he who rejects some of its leading principles, while he professes to retain others, is certain to fall into self-contradiction; which, if clearly pointed out in a "first and second admonition," and he still persist, he will be compelled obstinately to shut his eyes against the light, and thus, "sin" against the dictates of his own conscience.

It has been asked by persons who disapprove of all church proceedings on account of a difference in religious principles, Who is to judge what is heresy? We answer, Those who are to judge what is immorality in dealing with loose characters. To suppose it impossible to judge what heresy is, or to deny that the power of so deciding rests in a Christian church, is to charge the apostolic precept with impertinence. It is true, the judgment of a church may be erroneous as well as that of an individual; and it becomes them in their decisions to consider that they will all be revised at the great day: but the same may be said of all human judgment, civil or judicial, to which no one is so void of reason, as on this account to object.

IN CASES OF NOTORIOUS AND COMPLICATED WICKEDNESS, it appears, that in the primitive churches, immediate exclusion was the consequence. In the case of the incestuous Corinthian, there are no directions given for his being admonished, and excluded only in case of his being incorrigibly impenitent. The apostle determined what should be done—In the name of the Lord Jesus when ye are gathered together to deliver such a one unto Satan. We cannot but consider it as an error in the discipline of some churches where persons have been detected of gross and aggravated wickedness, that their exclusion has been suspended, and in many cases omitted, on the ground of their professed repentance. While the evil was a secret it was persisted in, but when exposed by a public detection, then repentance is brought forward, as it were in arrest of judgment. But can that repentance be genuine which is pleaded for the purpose of warding off the censures of a Christian church? We are persuaded it cannot. The eye of a true penitent will be fixed on the greatness of his sin, and he will be the last to discern or talk of his repentance for it. So far from pleading it, in order to evade censure, he will censure himself, and desire nothing more than that testimony may be borne against his conduct for the honour of Christ.

But allowing that repentance in such cases is sincere, still it is not of such account as to set aside the necessity of exclusion. The end to be answered by this measure is not merely the good of the party, but the “clearing” of a Christian church from the very appearance of conniving at immorality; and which cannot be accomplished by repentance only. Though Miriam might be truly sorry for her sin in having spoken against Moses, and though she might be healed of her leprosy; yet the Lord said unto Moses, if her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? Let her be shut out from the camp seven days; and after that let her be received in again. (Numb. xii. 14.)

We do not suppose, however, that every notorious fault requires immediate exclusion. The general rule given is— that NOTORIOUS EVILS SHOULD MEET WITH A PUBLIC REBUKE. Them that sin, rebuke before all, that others also may fear. (1 Tim. v. 20.) But this proceeding does not appear to amount to exclusion; it is rather of the nature of a censure or reprimand, accompanying an admonition. To us it appears that the circumstances attending a sin, ought to determine whether it require immediate exclusion or not. If these be highly aggravating; if there appear to have been premeditation, intention, and perseverance in the crime, put away from amongst yourselves that wicked person: but if circumstances extenuate, rather than heighten the evil, solemn admonition, accompanied with rebuke, ought to suffice, and no exclusion to follow but in case of incorrigible impenitence.

There are also faults which do not come under the denomination of notorious sins, wherein directions are given for recovering the offenders WITHOUT ANY MENTION BEING MADE OF EXCLUSION, EITHER IMMEDIATE OR ULTIMATE. There is perhaps in all the churches a description of men whose characters are far from being uniformly circumspect, and yet not sufficiently irregular to warrant their being separated from communion. They are disorderly walkers; busy-bodies in other men's matters, while negligent of their own; in a word, unamiable characters. Now those that are such we are directed to exhort, and charge that they conduct themselves as becometh Christians. If after this they continue disorderly, observe a degree of distance in your conduct towards them; withdraw your intimacy; let them feel the frowns of their brethren: yet be not wholly reserved, but occasionally explain to them the reasons of your conduct, affectionately admonishing them at the same time to repentance and amendment of life.

“Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.—For we hear that there are some who walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies. Now them that are such we command, and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. And if any obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him that he may be ashamed: yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.” (2 Thess. iii. 6—15.) If churches were to consult only their own reputation, they would often discard such persons at an early period: but where there is reason to hope that the heart is right in the main, great forbearance must be exercised, and long perseverance in endeavouring to recover. How many imperfections were discovered in the conduct of the twelve apostles, while their Lord was with them, and what an example of forbearance has he left us! One character reclaimed is of greater account and more to the honour of a Christian church, than many discarded.

Finally, a watchful eye upon the state of the church, and of particular members, with a seasonable interposition, may do more towards the preservation of good order than all other things put together. Discourage whisperings, backbitings, and jealousies. Frown on tale bearers, and give no ear to their tales. Nip contentions in the bud. Adjust differences in civil matters among yourselves. Bring together at an early period those in whom misconception and distrust have begun to operate, ere ill opinion ripen into settled dislike. By a frank and timely explanation in the presence of a common friend, that may be healed in an hour, which, if permitted to proceed, a series of years cannot eradicate. Be affectionately free with one another. Give tender and faithful hints where it appears to you that one of your brethren is in danger of being drawn aside from the principles or spirit of the gospel. Let all be given, from their first entering into connexion with you, to expect them. If any one take offence at such treatment, give him to understand that he who cannot endure a caution or a reproof, is unfit for Christian society; and is in the utmost danger of falling into mischief.

The free circulation of the blood, and the proper discharge of all the animal functions, are not more necessary to the health of the body, than good discipline is to the prosperity of a community.

If it were duly considered how much the general interests of religion, and even the salvation of men, may be affected by the purity and harmony of Christian churches, we should tremble at the idea of their being interrupted by us. The planting of a church in a neighbourhood where the gospel is preached, and the ordinances of Christ administered in their purity, is a great blessing. It is a temple reared for God, in which he designs to record his name, to meet with his humble worshippers, and to bless them. We have seen churches of this description, in the midst of a career of spiritual prosperity, edifying one another in love, and gathering souls to the Redeemer's standard, all in a little time, blasted and ruined by some unhappy event that has thrown them into disorder. One of the members, it may be, has acted unworthily—he is reprovèd—his relations or particular acquaintances take on his side—discipline is interrupted—the church is divided into parties—hard things are said on both sides—the bond of love is broken—tender minds are grieved, and retire—worship is but thinly attended, and the enjoyment of it is vanished—God's friends mourn in secret, and his enemies triumph, saying, aha! so would we have it! Truly it is a serious thing to occasion the ruin of a Church of Christ! If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy!

A. FULLER.

Humility makes a man peaceable among brethren, fruitful in well-doing, cheerful in suffering, and constant in holy walking. Humility fits us for the highest services we owe to Christ, and yet will not neglect the lowest service to the meanest saint. Humility can feed upon the meanest dish, and yet it is maintained by the choicest delicacies, as God, Christ, and glory. Humility will make a man bless him that curses him, and pray for those that persecute him. A humble heart is a habitation for God, a scholar for Christ, a companion of angels, a preserver of grace, and meet for glory. Humility is the nurse of our graces, preserver of our mercies, and the great promoter of holy duties.

THE DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS
TOWARDS EACH OTHER.

BY J. A. JAMES.

I. The first, and that which indeed seems to include every other, is LOVE.

The stress which is laid on this in the Word of God, both as it respects the manner in which it is stated, and the frequency with which it is enjoined, sufficiently prove its vast importance in the Christian temper, and its powerful influence on the communion of believers. It is enforced by our Lord as the identifying law of his kingdom. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." John xv. 12. By this we learn that the subjects of Christ are to be known and distinguished amongst men, by their mutual affection. This injunction is denominated the new commandment of the Christian economy; not that love was no duty before the coming of Christ; but it is now placed more prominently amongst the duties of believers; is urged on fresh grounds, enforced by a more perfect example, and constrained by stronger motives. The dispensation of Jesus Christ is a system of most wonderful, most mysterious grace; it is the manifestation, commendation, and perfection of divine love. It originated in the love of the Father, and is accomplished by the love of the Son. Jesus Christ was an incarnation of love in our world. He was love living, breathing, speaking, acting, amongst men. His birth was the nativity of love, his sermons the words of love, his miracles the wonders of love, his tears the meltings of love, his crucifixion the agonies of love, his resurrection the triumph of love. Hence it was natural, that love should be the cardinal virtue in the character of his saints, and that it should be the law which regulates their conduct towards each other.

And it is worthy of remark, that he has made his love to us, not only the motive, but the pattern of our love to each other. This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you, John xv. 17. Let us for our instruction dwell upon the properties of his love, that we may know what should be the characteristics of our own. His was real and great affection, and not a mere nominal one: so let us love not in word and in tongue only, but also in deed and in truth. His was free and disinterested, without any regard to our deserts: so ours should be independent of any regard to our own advantage. His was fruitful unto tears, and agonies, and blood, and death: so should ours in every thing that can establish the comfort of each other. His was a love of forbearance and forgiveness; so should ours be. His was purely a spiritual flame; not loving them as rational creatures merely, but as objects of divine affection, and subjects of divine likeness. His was unchangeable notwithstanding our weaknesses and unkindnesses: thus we are bound to love one another, and continue unalterable in our affection to each other, in opposition to all those little infirmities of temper and conduct which we daily discover in our fellow Christians.

The Apostles echoed the language of their Master, and continually enjoined the churches which they had planted, to love one another, and to let brotherly love abound and increase. It is a grace so important that, like holiness, no measure of it is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of the Word of God. It is the basis, and cement, and beauty of the Christian union. The church where it is wanting, whatever may be the number or gifts of its members, is nothing better than a heap of stones, which, however polished, want the coherence and similitude of a palace.

In the best and purest ages of the church, this virtue shone so brightly in the character of its members, was so conspicuous in all their conduct, was expressed in actions so replete with noble, disinterested, and heroic affection, as to become a proverb with surrounding pagans, and call forth the well known exclamation, "See how these Christians love one another!" A finer eulo-gium was never pronounced on the Christian church ; a more valuable tribute was never deposited on the altar of Christianity. Alas ! that it should so soon have ceased to be just, and that the church as it grew older should have lost its loveliness by losing its love.

But it will be necessary to point out the manner in which brotherly love wherever it exists will operate.

1. In a peculiar complacency in our fellow members, viewed as the objects of divine love.

Complacency is the very essence of love ; and the ground of all proper complacency in the saints, is their relation and likeness to God. We should feel peculiar delight in each other as fellow heirs of the grace of God ; partakers of like precious faith, and joint sharers of the common salvation. We must be dear to each other as the objects of the Father's mercy, of the Son's dying grace, and of the Spirit's sanctifying influence. The love of Christians is of a very sacred nature, and is quite peculiar. It is not the love of consanguinity, or friendship, or interest, or general esteem ; but it is an affection cherished for Christ's sake. They may see many things in each other to admire, such as an amiable temper, public spirit, tender sympathy ; but Christian love does not rest on these things, although they may increase it, but on the ground of a common relationship to Christ. On this account they are to take peculiar delight in each other, as being one in Christ. "These," should a believer exclaim, as he looks on the church, "are the objects of the Redeemer's living and dying love, whom he regards with complacency ; and out of affection to him, I feel an inexpressible delight in them. I love to associate with them, to talk with them, to look upon them, because they are Christ's."

2. Love to our brethren will lead us to bear one another's burthens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Gal. vi. 2.

When we see them oppressed with a weight of anxious care, instead of carrying ourselves with cold indifference and unfeeling distance towards them, we should cherish a tender solicitude to know and relieve their anxieties. How touching would such a salutation as the following be, from one Christian to another : "Brother, I have observed, with considerable pain, that your countenance has been covered with gloom, as if you were sinking under some inward solicitude. I would not be unpleasantly officious, nor wish to obtrude myself upon your attention, farther than is agreeable; but I offer you the expressions of Christian sympathy, and the assistance of Christian counsel. Can I in any way assist to mitigate your care, and restore your tranquillity?" At such sounds, the loaded heart would feel as if half its load were gone. It may be, the kind inquirer, could yield no effectual relief, but there is balm in his sympathy. The indifference of some professing Christians to the burthens of their brethren is shocking; they would see them crushed to the very earth with cares and sorrows, and never make one kind inquiry into their situation, nor lend a helping hand to lift them from the dust. Love requires that we should take the deepest interest in each other's case, that we should patiently listen to the tale of wo which a brother brings us, that we should mingle our tears with his, that we should offer him our advice, that we should suggest to him the consolations of the gospel; in short, we should let him see that his troubles reach not only our ear, but our heart. Sympathy is one of the finest, the most natural, the most easy expressions of love.

3. Love requires that we should visit our brethren in their affliction.

"I was sick and ye visited me, I was in prison and ye came unto me;—for as much as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me;" such is the language of Jesus Christ to his people, by which he teaches us how important and incumbent a duty it is for church members to visit each other in their afflictions. Probably there is no duty more neglected than this. Christians often lie on beds of sickness for weeks and months successively, without seeing a fellow member cross the threshold of their chamber door. How often have I been shocked, when upon inquiring of the sufferer whether such and such an individual residing in their neighbourhood had been to visit them, it had been said in reply, "Oh! no Sir, I have now been stretched on this bed for days and weeks. My pain and weakness have been so great, that I have scarcely been able to collect my thoughts for meditation and prayer. The sight of a dear Christian friend would indeed have relieved the dull monotony of this gloomy scene, and the voice of piety would have been as music to blunt my sense of pain, and lull my troubled heart to short repose; but such a sight and such a sound have been denied me. No friend has been near me, and it has aggravated sorrows, already heavy, to be thus neglected and forgotten by a church, which I joined with the hope of finding amongst them the comfort of sympathy. But alas! alas! I find them too much occupied with the things seen and temporal, to think of a suffering brother, to whom wearisome nights and months of vanity are appointed." How could I help exclaiming, "O, Christian love, bright image of the Saviour's heart! whither hast thou fled, that thou so rarely visitest the church on earth, to shed thine influence, and manifest thy beauties there?" There have been ages of Christianity, so historians inform us, in which brotherly love prevailed amongst Christians to such a degree, that, fearless of the infection diffused by the most malignant and contagious disorders, they have ventured to the bed side of their brethren expiring in the last stages of the plague, to administer the consolations of a hope full of immortality. This was love; love stronger than death, and which many waters could not quench. It was no doubt imprudent, but it was heroic, and circulated far and wide the praises of that dear name which was the secret of the wonder.

How many are there, now bearing the Christian name, who scarcely ever yet paid one visit to the bed side of a suffering brother. Shame and disgrace upon such professors!!! Let them not expect to hear the Saviour say, "I was sick, and ye visited me."

That this branch of Christian love may be performed with greater diligence, it would be a good plan for the pastor, at every church meeting, to mention the names of the afflicted members, and stir up the brethren to visit them. It would be particularly desirable for Christians to go to the scene of suffering on a Sabbath day, and read the Bible and sermons to the afflicted, at that time, as they are then peculiarly apt to feel their sorrows, in consequence of being cut off from the enjoyments of public worship.

4. "Pray one for another," James v. 16.

Not only with but for one another. A Christian should take the interests of his brethren into the closet. Private devotion is not to be selfish devotion. It would much increase our affection did we devote more of our private prayers to each other's welfare.

5. Pecuniary relief should be administered to those who need it.

"Distributing to the necessities of the saints," Rom. xii. 13, is mentioned amongst the incumbent duties of professing Christians. How just, how forcible is the interrogation of the Apostle, 1 John iii. 17, "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Nothing can be more absurd, than those pretensions to love, which are not supported by exertions to relieve the wants of the object beloved. It must be a singular affection which is destitute of mercy. So powerfully did this holy passion operate in the first ages of the church, that many rich Christians sold their estates, and shared their affluence with the poor. What rendered this act the more remarkable is, that it was purely voluntary. It is not our duty any more than it was theirs, to go this length; still, however, it is evident both from general principles as well as from particular precepts, that we are under obligation to make some provision for the comfort of the poor. This duty must be left in the statement of general terms, as it is impossible to define its precise limits. It does not appear to me to be at all incumbent to make regular periodical distributions to the poor, whether in circumstances of distress or not. Some churches have a registered list of pensioners, who come as regularly for their pay, as if they were hire-servants. If they are old, infirm, or unprovided for this is very well; but for those to receive relief, who are getting a comfortable subsistence by their labour, is an abuse of the charity of the church. The money collected at the Lord's supper, should be reserved for times of sickness and peculiar necessity.

It should be recollected, also, that public contributions do not release the members from the exercise of private liberality. The shilling a month which is given at the Lord's supper, seems in the opinion of many, to discharge them from all further obligation to provide for the comfort of their poorer brethren, and to be a sort of composition for the full exercise of religious charity. This is a great mistake; it ought rather to be considered as a mere earnest, or pledge of all that more effective and abundant liberality which they should exercise in secret. Every Christian who is indulged with a considerable share of the bounties of providence ought to consider the poorer members of the church, who may happen to live in his neighbourhood, as the objects of his peculiar care, interest, and relief.

6. Forbearance is a great part of love.

"Forbearing one another in love." Eph. iv. 2. In a Christian church, especially where it is of considerable magnitude, we must expect to find a very great diversity of character. There are all the gradations of intellect, and all the varieties of temper. In such cases great forbearance is absolutely essential to the preservation of harmony and peace. The strong must bear with the infirmities of the weak. Christians of great attainments in knowledge should not in their hearts despise, nor in their conduct ridicule the feeble conceptions of those who are babes in Christ; but most meekly correct their errors, and most kindly instruct their ignorance. This is love. In very many persons there will unhappily be found some things, which although they by no means affect the reality and sincerity of their religion, considerably diminish its lustre, and have a tendency, without the caution of love, to disturb our communion with them. Some have a forward and obtrusive manner; others are talkative; others indulge a complaining, whining, begging disposition; others are abrupt, almost to rudeness, in their address. These, and many more, are the spots of God's children—with which we are sometimes so much displeased, as to feel an alienation of heart from the subjects of them, although we have no doubt of their real piety. Now here is room for the exercise of love. These are the cases in which we are to employ that charity which covereth all things. Are we to love only amiable Christians? Perhaps, after all, in the substantial parts of religion, these rough characters far excel others, whom courtesy and amiableness have carried to the highest degree of polish. I do not say we are to love these individuals for their peculiarities, but in spite of them. Not on their own account, but for Christ's sake, to whom they belong. And what can be a greater proof of our affection for him, than to love an unlovely individual on his account?

If you had the picture of a valued friend, would you withdraw from it your affection, and throw it away, because there was a spot upon the canvass, which in some degree disfigured the painting? No: you would say, it is a likeness of my friend still, and I love it, notwithstanding its imperfection. The believer is a picture of your best friend; and will you discard him, neglect him, because there is a speck upon the painting?

7. Love should induce us to watch over one another.

Am I my brother's keeper? was an inquiry suitable enough in the lips of a murderer, but most unsuitable and inconsistent from a Christian. We are brought into fellowship for the very purpose of being keepers of each other. We are to watch over our brethren, and admonish and reprove them as circumstances may require. I do not mean that church members should pry into each other's secrets, or be busy bodies in other men's matters, for that is forbidden by God and abominable in the sight of man. 1 Thess. iii. 11. 1 Pet. iv. 15. Much less are they to assume authority over each other, and act the part of proud and tyrannical inquisitors. But still we are to "exhort one another daily, lest any be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." We are not to suffer sin to be committed, or duty to be omitted by a brother, without affectionately admonishing him. What can be more incumbent, more obligatory, than this? Can we indeed love any one, and at the same time see him do that which we know will injure him, without entreating him to desist? "Brethren, if any man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." Gal. vi. 1.

Let us then take heed against that Cain-like spirit which is too prevalent in our churches, and which leads many to act as if their fellow members were no more to them than the stranger at the ends of the earth. Striking are the words of God to the Jews, "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke him, and not suffer sin upon him." Lev. xix. 17. Not to rebuke him then when he sins, is instead of loving him to hate him. This neglect is what the apostle means by being partakers of other men's sins. The admonition to "warn the unruly," 1 Thess. v. 14. was delivered not merely to ministers, but to private Christians.

I know no duty more neglected than this. It is one of the most prevalent defects of Christians. Many a backslider would have been prevented from going far astray, if in the very first stages of his declension some brother, who had observed his critical state, had faithfully and affectionately warned and admonished him. What shame, and anguish, and disgrace, would the offender himself have been spared, and what dishonour and scandal would have been averted from the church by this one act of faithful love!

I am aware it is a difficult and self-denying duty; but that cannot excuse its neglect. Love will enable us to perform it, and the neglect of it violates the law of Christ.

II. Church members should cultivate PEACE and HARMONY one with another.

"Keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Ephes. iv. 3. Be of one mind, live in peace. 2 Cor. iii. 11. Follow after the things which make for peace. Rom. xiv. 19." It is quite needless to expatiate on the value and importance of peace. What society can exist without it? I shall therefore proceed to state what things are necessary for the attainment of this end.

1. Members should be subject one to another in humility.

"Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you, be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility." 1 Pet. v. 5. Now from hence we learn, that some kind of mutual subjection ought to be established in every Christian church. This of course does not mean, that some members are to make an entire surrender of their opinions and feelings to others, so far as never to oppose them, and always to be gulded by them. It is not the subjection of an inferior to a superior, but of equals to one another ; not that which is extorted by authority, but voluntarily conceded by affection ; not yielded as matter of right, but given for the sake of peace : in short, it is the mutual subjection of love and humility. Young and inexperienced persons ought to be subject to the aged ; for what can be more indecorous than to see a stripling standing up at a church meeting, and with confidence and flippancy, opposing his views to those of a disciple old enough to be his grandfather? Youth loses its loveliness when it loses its modesty. They should hearken with deference and most reverential attention to the opinion of the aged. Nor does the obligation rest here; it extends to those who are equal in age and rank: Church members should be subject to each other ; they should not be determined at all events to have their own way, but should go as far as principle will let them, in giving up their own views and predilections to the rest. Every one should hearken with respectful attention to the opinions of others, and be willing to sacrifice his own. The contention ought not to be for rule, but for subjection. Instead of haughtily exclaiming, "I have as much right to have my way as any one else," we should say, "I have an opinion, and will mildly and respectfully state it ; yet I will not force it upon the church, but give way to the superior wisdom of others, if I am opposed." There should be in every member a supposition that others may see as clearly, probably more so, than himself.

The democratic principle in our system of church government must not be stretched too far. The idea of equal rights is soon abused and converted into the means of turbulence and faction. Liberty, fraternity, and equality, are words which both in church and state have often become the signals in the mouths of some, for the lawless invasion of the rights of others. It has been strangely forgotten, that no man in social life has a right to please only himself ; his will is, or ought to be, the good of the whole. And that individual violates at once the social compact, whether in ecclesiastical or civil society, who pertinaciously and selfishly exclaims,

"I will have my way." Such a declaration constitutes him a rebel against the community. Yet alas! how much of this rebellion is to be found not only in the world, but in the church; and what havoc and desolation has it occasioned. Unfortunately for the peace of our societies, it is sometimes disguised, by the deceitfulness of the human heart, under the cloak of zeal for the general good. Church members should enter into these sentiments, and thus comply with the apostolic admonitions, "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves." Phil. ii. 3. "In honour preferring one another." Rom. xii. 10.

2. To the preservation of peace, a right treatment of offences is essentially necessary.

We should ever be cautious not to GIVE offence.

Some persons are rude, dogmatical, or indiscreet; they never consult the feelings of those around them, and are equally careless whom they please and whom they offend. They say and do just what their feelings prompt, without the least regard to the consequences of their words and actions. They act like an individual who because it pleases him, discharges a loaded musket in a crowded street, where some are almost sure to be wounded. This is not the charity which is kind, courteous, and civil. A Christian should be ever afraid of giving offence; he should be anxious not to injure the wing of an insect, much more the mind of a brother. The peace of his brethren should even be more sacred than his own. It should be his fixed determination never, if possible, to occasion a moment's pain. For this purpose he should be discreet, and mild, and courteous in all his language, weighing the import of words before he utters them, and calculating the consequence of actions before he performs them. He should remember that he is moving in a crowd, and be careful not to trample on, or jostle his neighbours.

We should all be backward to RECEIVE offence.

Quarrels often begin for want of the caution I have just stated, and are then continued for want of the backwardness I am now enforcing. An observance of these two principles would keep the world in peace. There are some people whose passions are like tow, kindled into a blaze in a moment by the least spark which has been designedly or accidentally thrown upon it. A word, a look, is in some cases quite enough to be considered a very serious injury. It is no uncommon thing for such persons to excuse themselves on the ground that their feelings are so delicately sensible that they are offended by the least touch. This is an humiliating confession, for it is acknowledging that instead of being like the cedar of Lebanon, or the oak of the forest which laughs at the tempest, and is unmoved by the boar of the wood, they resemble the sensitive plant, a little squeamish shrub, which trembles before the breeze, and shrivels and contracts beneath the pressure of an insect. Delicate feelings !! In plain English, this means that they are petulant and irascible. I would have a text of Scripture written upon a label, and tied upon the forehead of such persons; and it should be this—"Beware of dogs."

We should never suffer ourselves to be offended, until, at least, we are sure that offence was intended; and this is really not so often as we are apt to conclude. Had we but patience to wait, or humility to inquire, we should find that many things were done by mistake, which we are prone to attribute to design. How often do we violate that charity which thinketh no evil, and which imperatively demands of us to attribute a good motive to another's conduct, except a bad one is proved. Let us then deliberately determine, that, by God's grace, we will not be easily offended. If such a resolution were generally made and kept, offences would cease. Let us first ascertain whether offence was intended, before we suffer the least emotion of anger to be indulged; and even then, when we have proved that the offence was not committed by accident, let us next ask ourselves whether it is necessary to notice it. What wise man will think it worth while, when an insect has stung him, to pursue and punish the aggressor?

When we have received an injury which is too serious to be passed over unnoticed, and requires explanation in order to our future pleasant intercourse with the individual who inflicts it, we should neither brood over it in silence, nor communicate it to a third person, but go directly to the offender himself, and state to him in private our views of his conduct. This is most clearly enjoined by our divine Lord—"Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Matt. xviii. 15. Many persons lock up the injury in their own bosom; and instead of going to their offending brother, dwell upon his conduct in silence, until their imagination has added to it every possible aggravation, and their minds have come to the conclusion to separate themselves for ever from his society. From that hour, they neither speak to him, nor think well of him; but consider and treat him as an alien from their hearts. This is not religion. Our duty is to go, and to go as speedily as possible, to the offender. The longer we delay, the more serious will the offence appear in our eyes, and the more difficult will it be to persuade ourselves to obtain the interview.

Others, when they have received an offence, set off to some friend, perhaps to more than one, to lodge their complaint, and tell how they have been treated. The report of the injury spreads further and wider, exaggerated and swelled by those circumstances, which every gossip through whose hands it passes, chooses to add to the original account, till in process of time it comes around to the offender himself, in its magnified and distorted form, who now finds that he in his turn is aggrieved and calumniated; and thus, a difficult and complicated case of offence, grows out of what was at first very simple in its nature, and capable of being adjusted. We ought to go at once to the party offending us, before a syllable has past our lips on the subject to a third person; and we should also close our ears against the complaints of any individual, who would inform us of the fault of a brother, before he has told the offender himself.

Sometimes when persons have received a supposed offence, they will endeavour to gain information from others in a circuitous and clandestine manner, in order, as they think, to conduct the affair with prudence. This is crooked policy, and rarely succeeds. It is next to impossible to creep with a step so soft, and to speak with a voice so muffled, as to escape detection; and if the individual surprise us in the act of ferreting into holes and corners for evidence, it will be sure to excite his indignation and disgust. No, go to him at once, AND ALONE. This is the command of Scripture, and it is approved by reason, Matt. xviii. 15—17. This single admonition is worth all the volumes that philosophy ever wrote, and ought to be inscribed in letters of gold. It cannot be too often repeated, nor can too much stress be laid upon it. Third persons, whose ears are ever open to catch reports, should be avoided as the plague; they are the mischief-makers, quarrel-mongers, and pests of our churches.

Great caution, however, should be observed as to the spirit in which we go to the offending brother. All the meekness and gentleness of Christ should be in our temper and manner. We should dip our very tongue in the fountain of love. Every feeling, every look, every tone of anger, should be suppressed. We should not at once accuse our brother of the injury, for the report may be false; but modestly ask him if it be correct. All attempts to extort confession by threatenings should be avoided; and instead of these, nothing should be employed but the appeals of wisdom, the gentle persuasions of love.* If we succeed in this private inter-

* There is a very interesting description of the manner in which private offences should be treated, in that inimitable book, "Social Religion Exemplified." Part of a dialogue, I here transcribe, as showing the manner and spirit in which this very difficult matter ought to be managed:—

"NEOPHYTUS. If Epenetus please, and with the good leave of the company, I would further request a brief account of private offences, that probably occurred among these professing brethren.

"EPENETUS. I shall then gratify my young friend, which I am persuaded will not be ungrateful to the company. Upon a time, in some discourse which Egwan (of whom you have heard something before) and one Hyderus had, wherein they differed in opinion, the latter told the former that he was an insignificant fellow, whose thoughts were not to be regarded. Egwan said in answer, that he took it very ill of him. The other replied, You may take it as you please. So their conversation ended in a cloud. Egwan had but little rest that night. Is it so, then, he says to himself, and yet did Christ redeem me? Did the Spirit of the Lord visit my heart? Did the church of Christ receive me? And must I (though weak and feeble) be called insignificant? Tossed through the night in much uneasiness, he thought to go in the morning to one of the elders to complain. He got up and as usual, in the view to gain our brother so far as to produce a little relenting, we ought to cherish, by the kindest expressions, these beginnings of repentance, and to avoid all demands of unnecessary concession, all haughty airs of conscious superiority, all insulting methods of dispensing pardon. "Brother," we should say, "my aim first place committed himself to God: but while he was at prayer, mourning over his present uneasiness, that word came into his mind, If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. He quickly saw, that it was not his immediate business to divulge it to any body,—no, not to an elder; but to go directly to the brother who gave him the offence. Accordingly, he desired God to give him meekness of wisdom from above, and to bless his design. So he went to Hyderus, and spoke to him as follows:

Egwan. Brother I have had a very uneasy night; you spoke, I think, very unadvisedly with your lips, to say no worse of it; you have grieved me much, and surely you have sinned against God. I have judged it my duty to come and have some talk with you about it; and have mentioned it to none but the Lord. You know you called me, in disdain, An insignificant fellow. Pray, what do you think of the expression, and of the spirit in which it was spoken?

Hyderus. Truly, I think it was not worth your while to come to me about it. I charge you not with pride; yet pray does it not look very much that way, that you should make it your business to come hither to prove yourself valuable and significant?

Egwan. I came with no other design than to tell you my grievance. For if I am such a person as, with disdain, you described me, then am I not regarded by the Redeemer; have no portion in him; nor doth his Spirit dwell in me; nor hath he ever taken notice of me; otherwise, sure, I should be entitled to a place in the esteem of his children. Why did the church receive me? You have censured the whole church, as well as myself.

Hyderus. I do not pretend to justify what I said; but think you greatly aggravate it; whereas, you might as well have been easy without taking any notice of it.

Egwan. And suffer the sin to lie upon you? Brother, nothing is desired but repentance for sinning against God. I hope I am willing to think meanly of myself, but am not so willing that any thing appertaining to the Redeemer's kingdom should be treated with derision or disdain.

Hyderus. Dear brother, I disdain you not; you discover yourself to be a Christian of good improvement. I am sorry to have so sinned against God and you, and desire that brotherly love and tender respect may continue.

Egwan. Amen; I am satisfied, dear brother.

CHRISTOPHILUS. What a speedy, happy end was put to this offence! Oh, what endless strife of tongues, evil surmisings, ani-was not to degrade you, but to convince you; and since you see and acknowledge your fault, I am satisfied, and shall forgive and forget it from this moment."

If the offender should refuse to acknowledge his fault, and it should be necessary for us to take a witness or two, which is our next step in settling a disagreement, we must be very careful to select men of great discretion and calmness; men who will not be likely to inflame, instead of healing the wound; men who will act as mediators, not as partizans.

It is absolutely necessary in order to offences being removed, that the offender, upon his being convicted of an injury, should make all suitable concession; and it will generally be found, that in long continued and complicated strifes, this obligation becomes mutual. Whoever is the ORIGINAL aggressor, a feud seldom continues long, ere both parties are to blame. Even the aggrieved individual has something to concede; and the way to induce the other to acknowledge his greater offence, is for him to confess his lesser one. It is the mark of a noble and ingenuous mind to confess an error, and solicit its forgiveness. "Confess your faults one to another," is an inspired injunction. The man who is too proud to acknowledge his fault, when his conduct demands it, has violated his duty, and is a fit subject for censure. There are some persons, so far forgetful of their obligations to Christ and to their brethren, as not only to refuse to make concession, but even to give explanation. Their proud spirits disdain even to afford the least satisfaction in the way of throwing light upon a supposed offence. This is most criminal, and is such a defiance of the authority of the Lord mosities, and popular clamour, spring and prevail in some places, for want of observing such a method as this!

NEOPHYTUS. But what if Egwan had gone to the elder first, as he thought once to do?

EPENETUS. Why, then he would have been reprov'd for taking such a wrong step; would have been better informed, and sent about his business.

NEOPHYTUS. But what if Hyderus had justified himself and persisted in his sin?

EPENETUS. Then Egwan must have taken another opportunity, and desired a brother or two to go along with him; that they might use their joint endeavours to bring the offender to repentance.

Jesus, as ought to bring the individual before the bar of the church.

We should be very cautious not to exact unreasonable concession. A revengeful spirit is often as effectually gratified by imposing hard and humiliating terms of reconciliation, as it possibly could be by making the severest retaliation. No offender is so severely punished, as he who is obliged to degrade himself in order to obtain a pardon. And as all revenge is unlawful, we should be extremely careful not to gratify it at the very time and by the manner in which we are dispensing pardon. To convince a brother, not to degrade him, is the object we are to seek; and especially should we endeavour to show him, that his offence is more against Christ, than against ourselves.

When suitable acknowledgments are made, the act of forgiveness is no longer optional with us. From that moment every spark of anger, every feeling of a revengeful nature, is to be quenched. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the devil." Ephes. iv. 26, 27. If we suffer sleep to visit our eyes before we have forgiven an offending, but penitent brother, we are committing a greater offence against Christ, than our brother has committed against us. The man that takes a revengeful temper to his pillow, is inviting Satan to be his guest. Such a man would probably tremble at the thought of taking a harlot to his bed; but is it no crime to sleep in the embrace of a fiend? The word revenge should be blotted from the Christian's vocabulary by the tears which he sheds for his own offences. How can an implacable Christian repeat that petition of our Lord's prayer, "Forgive me my trespasses as I forgive them that trespass against me?" Does he forget that if he uses such language while he is living in a state of resentment against a brother, he is praying for perdition—for how does he forgive them that trespass against him? By revenge. How strong is the language of Paul. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be kind one to another, and tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you." Ephes. iv. 30—32 What motives to a forgiving spirit!! Can that man have ever tasted the sweets of pardoning mercy who refuses to forgive an erring brother? Go, Christian professor, go first to the law, and learn thy twice ten thousand sins; go in imagination to the brink of the bottomless pit, and as thou hearkenest to the howlings of the damned, remember that those howlings might have been thine; then go the cross, and while thou lookest on the bleeding victim, which is nailed to it, hearken to the accents of mercy which breathe like soft music in thine ear, "Go in peace, thy sins are all forgiven thee." What, will you, can you return from such scenes, with purposes of revenge? No; impossible. An implacable Christian is a contradiction in terms. "Bigots there may be, and have been, of all denominations; but an implacable, irreconcilable, unforgiving Christian, is of the same figure of speech, as a godly adulterer, a religious drunkard, a devout murderer."

The last step in reclaiming an offender, is to bring him before the assembled church. "If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established; and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." Every effort that ingenuity can invent, affection prompt, or patience can conduct, ought to be made, before it be brought to be investigated by the brethren at large. If every trivial disagreement be laid before the church, it will soon become a court of common pleas, and have all its time consumed in adjusting matters of which it ought never to have heard.

An offence ought never to be considered as removed, until love is restored. We should never rest until such an explanation has been given and received, as will enable us to return to harmony and confidence. A mere cessation of actual hostilities may do for the intercourse of the world, but not for the fellowship of the saints. There is no actual strife between the tenants of the sepulchre; but the cold and gloomy stillness of a churchyard is an inappropriate emblem of the peace of a Christian church. In such a community we expect, that not only will the discords and sounds of enmity be hushed, but the sweet harmonies of love be heard; not only that the conflict of rage will terminate, but be succeeded by the activity of genuine affection.

When once an offence has been removed, it should never be adverted to in future. Its very remembrance should if possible be washed from the memory by the waters of Lethe. Other causes of disagreement may exist, and fresh feuds arise; but the old one is dead and buried, and its angry ghost should never be evoked to add fury to the passion of its successor. Nor should we, when in our turn we are convicted of an error, shelter ourselves from reproof, by reminding our reprover, that he was once guilty of a similar offence. This is mean, dishonourable, unchristian, and mischievous.

Every Christian should bear reproof with meekness. Few know how to give reproof with propriety, still fewer how to bear it. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be as excellent oil, which shall not break my head." How small is the number who can adopt this language in sincerity. What wounded pride, what mortification and resentment are felt by many when their faults are told to them. When we have so far sinned as to deserve rebuke, we ought to have humility enough to bear it with meekness; and should it be delivered in greater weight, or with less affection than we think is proper, a penitential remembrance of our offence should prevent all feelings of irritation or resentment. The scripture is very severe in its language to those who turn with neglect, anger, or disgust from the admonitions of their brethren. "He that despiseth reproof sinneth." Prov. x. 17. "He that hateth reproof is brutish." Prov. xii. 1. "He that is often reprov'd, and yet hardeneth his neck, shall be suddenly destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. xxix. 1. Such persons are guilty of great pride, great neglect of the word of God, and great contempt of one of the ordinances of Heaven, and thus injure their souls by that which was given to benefit them.

Do not then act so wickedly as to turn with indignation from a brother that comes in the spirit of meekness to admonish and reprove you. Rather thank him for his fidelity, and profit by his kindness. I know not a more decisive mark of true and strong piety than a willingness to receive reproof with meekness and to profit by admonition, come from whom it might.

2. If the peace of the church be preserved, the members must watch against, and repress, A TATTLING DISPOSITION.

There are few circumstances which tend more to disturb the harmony and repose of our societies, than a proneness in some of their members, to a gossiping, tattling disposition. There are persons so deeply infected with the Athenian passion to hear or tell some new thing, that their ears or lips are always open. With insatiable appetite they devour all the news they can by any means collect, and are never easy until it is all disgorged again, to the unspeakable annoyance and disgust of others around them. It is one of the mysteries of God's natural government, that such should gain a sort of adventitious consequence by the mischief they occasion, and be thus sheltered from scorn by being regarded with dread. The tattler is of this description: I mean the individual who loves to talk of other men's matters, and especially of their faults: for it will be found, that by a singular perversity of disposition, those who love to talk about the circumstances of others, rarely ever select their excellencies as matters of discourse, but almost always fix upon their failings; and thus, to borrow a simile of Solomon's, they resemble the fly which neglects the healthful part of the frame to pitch and luxuriate on the sore.

In the case of tattling there are generally three parties to blame; there is first the gossip, then the person who is weak enough to listen to, and report the tales; and lastly, the individual who is the subject of the report, who suffers his mind to be irritated, instead of going, in the spirit of meekness, to require an explanation from the original reporter.

Now let it be a rule with every church member, to avoid speaking of the circumstances, and especially of the faults of others. Let this rule have the sanctity of the laws of Heaven, and the immutability of those of the Medes and Persians. Let every individual resolve with himself thus: "I will be slow to speak of others,

I will neither originate a report by saying what I think, nor help to circulate a report by repeating what I hear." This is a most wise regulation, which would at once preserve our own peace and the peace of society. We should beware of saying any thing, which by the perverted ingenuity of a slanderous disposition, may become the basis of a tale to the disadvantage of another. It is not enough, as I have hinted, that we do not originate a report, but we ought not to circulate it. When it reaches us, there it should stop and go no farther. We should give it to prudence, to be buried in silence. We must never appear pleased with the tales of gossips and newsmongers, much less with the scandals of the backbiter; our smile is their reward. If there were no listeners, there would be no reporters. In company let us always discourage and repress such conversation.

Let us avoid and discourage the hollow deceitful practice of indulging a tattling disposition under the cover of lamenting over the faults of our brethren.

Many who would be afraid or ashamed to mention the faults of a brother in the way of direct affirmation or report, easily find, or attempt to find, a disguise for their backbiting disposition in affected lamentations. "What a pity it is," they exclaim, "that brother B. should have behaved so ill. Poor man, I am sorry that he should have committed himself. The petulance of his temper is exceedingly to be regretted. He does not much honour religion." "And then," replies a second, "how sorry I am to hear this report of sister C.; how the world will talk, and the cause of Christ suffer by such unwarrantable things in the conduct of a professor. It will not be a secret long, or I would not mention it." "Oh," says a third, "I have heard whispers of the same kind in times past. I have long suspected it, and mentioned my fears some months ago to a friend or two. I thought she was not the person she appeared to be. I am very sorry for her, and for the cause of Christ. I have long had my suspicions, and now they are all confirmed. I shall tell the friends to whom I expressed my fears what I have now heard." In this way is a tattling disposition indulged in the circles of even good people, under the guise of lamentation for the sins of others. "Odious and disgusting cant," would a noble and honourable Christian exclaim, with hallowed indignation, "which of you, if you really lamented the fact, would report it? which of you has gone to the erring individual, inquired into the truth of the matter, and, finding it true, has mildly expostulated? Let your lamentations be poured out before God and the offender, but to none else."

Others, again, indulge this disposition by running about to inquire into the truth of a report which they say has reached them, respecting a brother. Have you heard any thing of brother H. lately? they ask with a significant look. "No;" replies the person. "Then I suppose it is not true." "Why, what have you heard? Nothing I hope affecting his moral character." "Not very materially; but I hope it is false." The tattler cannot go, however, without letting out the secret, and then sets off to inquire of another and another. Mischief making creature. Why had he not gone, as was his obvious duty, to the individual who was the subject of the report, and inquired of him the truth of it? Aye, but then the story would have been contradicted at once, and the pleasure of telling it would have been ended.

There are cases in which a modest disclosure of the failings of others is necessary. Such, for example, as when a church is likely to be deceived in the character of an individual, whom it is about to admit to communion. In such instances, the person who is aware of the imposition that is likely to be practised, should go directly to the pastor, and make him acquainted with the fact; instead of which some persons whisper their suspicions to any and to many, except the pastor. It is perfectly lawful also to prevent any brother from being betrayed into a ruinous confidence in pecuniary matters by informing him of the character of the individual by whom he is about to be deceived. Silence, in such cases, would be an obvious injury.

BE SLOW TO SPEAK, then, is a maxim which every Christian should always keep before his eyes. Silent people can do no harm; but talkers are always dangerous.

III. Besides these things, there are duties which members owe to the church in its collective capacity.

1. They are bound to take a deep interest in its concerns, and to seek its prosperity by all lawful means.

Every one should feel that he has a personal share in the welfare of the society. He should consider that having selected that particular community with which he is associated, as his religious home, he is under a solemn obligation to promote, by every proper effort, its real interest. He is to be indifferent to nothing which at any time affects its prosperity. Some members, from the moment they have joined a Christian church take no concern in any of its affairs. They scarcely ever attend a church meeting; they know neither who are excluded, nor who are received. If members are added, they express no delight; if none are admitted, they feel no grief. They fill up their places at the table of the Lord, and in the house of God; and beyond this, seem to have nothing else to do with the church. This is a most criminal apathy; a Christian ought to be as tremblingly alive to the welfare of the religious society to which he is united, as he is to the success of his worldly affairs.

2. They are bound to attend all the meetings of the church, at least so far as their circumstances will allow. They had better be absent from sermons and prayer-meetings, than from these. How can they know the state of the society, if they are not present when its affairs are exhibited and arranged? or how can they exercise that proper confidence in the piety of the brethren, which is essential to fellowship, if they are absent at the time of their admission?

3. They should most conscientiously devote their gifts, graces, and abilities to the service of the church, in an orderly and modest way; neither obtruding their assistance when it is not required, nor withholding it when it is solicited. Those who have gifts of prayer should not be backward to exercise them for the edification of their brethren. Those who have penetration and sound judgment, should render their counsel and advice upon every occasion. Persons of large and respectable worldly connexions may often use their influence with great benefit to the temporal affairs of the society.

And there is one line of charitable exertion, which would be peculiarly beneficial, and which has been too much neglected in all our societies; I mean the practice of respectable members reading the Scriptures, religious tracts, and sermons, in the habitations of the poor. I am aware that this is an age when many run to an fro, and when lay preaching is carried to a very improper and mischievous extent. Some who have no other qualification for preaching than boldness and ignorance, are every Sabbath employed, of whom it might be said, that it is a pity they have not the gift of silence. Unfortunately, those who are most qualified, are frequently least disposed; while the least qualified, are the most zealous. But how many wise, judicious, holy men, are there in our churches, who would be most honourably, and most usefully employed, in reading the words of life, and short evangelical sermons, in the cottages of the poor. Let a convenient house be selected, and the neighbours invited to attend: and who can tell what vast benefit would accrue from such a scheme? By the blessing of God upon these efforts, reformation would be wrought in the lower classes; religion would gain an entrance where it could be introduced by no other means; and our churches be replenished with holy, consistent members. Persons of respectable circumstances in life, especially, should thus employ themselves, as their situation gives them greater influence. Females may be thus engaged, without transgressing either against the injunction of the apostle, or the modesty which is so becoming their sex. I am astonished that means of usefulness so simple, so easy, and so efficient, are not more generally employed.

4. It is due to the authority of the church, that every member should cordially submit to its discipline. Without this, order would be destroyed, and the reign of anarchy introduced. This, indeed, as we have already considered, is essentially implied in the very act of joining the church; and no one ought to think of such an act of union, who is not determined to submit to its rules and its decisions.

☞ The foregoing tract is taken from the Church Member's Guide, a book which deserves to be in the hands of every Christian.

THE DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS TO THEIR PASTORS.

FROM THE CHURCH MEMBER'S GUIDE, BY J. A. JAMES.

It is the will and appointment of the Lord Jesus Christ, the king and head of his churches, that they should behave towards their pastors, as his ministers, who come in his name, bear his commands, and transact his business; and who are to be treated in every respect, in a manner that corresponds with their office. In a subordinate sense, they are ambassadors for Christ, and are to be received and esteemed in a way that corresponds with the authority and glory of him who commissions them. Whoever slights, insults, or neglects them, in the discharge of their official duties, disobeys and despises their divine Master, who will keenly resent all the injuries that are offered them. No earthly government will allow its messengers to be rejected and insulted with impunity, much less will the Lord of the church. Those who entertain low thoughts of the pastoral office, and neglect its ministrations; who speak contemptuously of their ministers; who excite a spirit of resistance to their counsels, admonitions, and reproofs; who endeavour to lessen that just reverence, to which for their works' sake, and on their Master's behalf they are entitled, certainly despise them, and not only them, but Him that sent them also, and for such conduct will incur the heavy displeasure of Christ, Luke x. 16. 1 Thess. v. 13.

But to descend to particulars; the duty of church members towards their pastors includes:

I. Submission to their just and scriptural authority.

It is readily admitted that the unscriptural, and therefore usurped domination of the priesthood is the root whence arose the whole system of papal tyranny; which, springing up like a tree of poison in the garden of the Lord, withered by its shadow, and blighted by its influence, almost every plant and flower of genuine Christianity. It is matter of no regret, therefore, nor of surprise, if a ceaseless jealousy should be maintained by those who understand the principles of religious liberty, against the encroachments of pastoral authority. Still, however, there is authority belonging to the pastor; for office without authority is a solecism. "Remember them that have the rule over you," said Paul to the Hebrews, xiii. 7. "Obey them that have the rule over you. Submit yourselves, for they watch for your souls," ver. 17. "They addicted themselves to the ministry; submit yourselves to such" 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 16. These are inspired injunctions, and they enjoin obedience and submission on Christian churches to their pastors. The authority of pastors, however, is not legislative or coercive, but simply declarative and executive. To define with precision its limits, is as difficult as to mark the boundaries of the several colours of the rainbow, or those of light and darkness at the hour of twilight in the hemisphere. The minister is to command, yet he is not to "lord it over God's heritage." This is not the only case, in which the precise limits of authority are left undefined by the Scriptures. The duties of the conjugal union are laid down in the same general manner: the husband is to rule and the wife to obey; yet it is difficult to declare where in this instance authority and submission end. In each of these instances the union is founded on mutual love, confidence, and esteem, and it might therefore be rationally supposed, that under these circumstances general terms are sufficient, and that there would arise no contests for power. If the people see that all the authority of their pastor is employed for their benefit, they will not be inclined to ascertain by measurement whether he has passed its limits. The very circumstance of his prerogative being thus undefined, should on the one hand make him afraid of extending it, and on the other, render his church cautious of diminishing it. It is my decided conviction, that in some of our churches, the pastor is depressed far below his just level. He is considered merely in the light of a speaking brother. He has no official distinction or authority. He may flatter like a sycophant, he may beg like a servant, he may woo like a lover; but he is not permitted to enjoin like a ruler. His opinion is received with no deference, his person treated with no respect, and in the presence of some of his lay tyrants, if he say any thing at all, it must be somewhat similar to the ancient soothsayers, for he is only permitted to peep and mutter from the dust.

Those persons who are anxious to strip their pastors of all just elevation, cannot expect to derive much edification from their labours; for instruction and advice, like substances falling to the earth, impress the mind with a momentum, proportionate to the height from which they descend.

II. Church members should treat their pastors with distinguishing honour, esteem, and love.

“Let the elders that rule well be accounted worthy of double honour, especially they that labour in the word and doctrine.” 1 Tim. v. 17. “Know them that have the rule over you, and esteem them very highly in love, for their works’ sake.” 1 Thess. v. 11, 12. To prescribe in what way our love should express itself, is almost needless, as love is the most inventive passion of the heart, and will find or make a thousand opportunities for displaying its power. Love is also practical, as well as ingenious, and does not confine itself either to the speculations of the judgment, or the feelings of the heart. It breathes in kind words, and lives in kind deeds. Where a minister is properly esteemed and loved, there will be the greatest deference for his opinions, the most delicate attention to his comfort, a scrupulous respect for his character. Some people treat their minister as if he could feel nothing but blows. They are rude, uncourteous, churlish. Instead of this, let him see the most studious and constant care to promote his happiness and usefulness. When he is in sickness, visit him; in trouble, sympathise with him; when absent from home, take a kind interest in his family; when he returns, greet him with a smile; at the close of the labours of the Sabbath, let the deacons and leading members gather round him, and not suffer him to retire from his scene of public labours without the reward of some tokens of their approbation, if it be only one friendly pressure of the hand. Let him see that his prayers, and sermons, and solicitude, render him dear to the hearts of his flock. It is astonishing what an influence is sometimes produced upon a minister’s mind and comfort, even by the least expression of his people’s regard. Of this we have a beautiful instance in the life of Paul. On that important journey to Rome, which was to decide the question of life or death, he appears to have felt a season of temporary depression when the imperial city presented itself to his view. In silent meditation he revolved, not without some degree of dismay, his approaching appeal to a tribunal from which he had nothing in the way of clemency to expect. For a little while the heroism of this exalted man was somewhat affected by his situation. At this juncture some of the Roman Christians, who had been apprised of his approach, came out as far as the Appii-forum, and the three taverns, to meet him, "whom, when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage." From that moment fears of Nero, of prison, and of death, all left him. He sprung forward with new ardour in his career, prepared to offer himself in sacrifice on the altar of martyrdom. If then the love of these brethren, who had travelled a few stages to meet Paul, produced so happy an effect upon the mind of this illustrious apostle, how certainly might the members of our churches calculate upon a similar influence being produced upon the hearts of their pastors, by even the smaller expressions of their affection.

III. Attendance upon their ministration, is another duty which church members owe their pastors.

This attendance should be constant, not occasional. Some of our members give unspeakable pain to their pastors by the irregularity of their visits to the house of God. A little inclemency of weather, or the slightest indisposition of body, is sure to render their seats vacant. Sometimes a still more guilty cause than this exists. Oh! "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines triumph." Many professors do not scruple to devote a part of the Sabbath to travelling. They do not probably set off upon a journey in the morning of the Sabbath, and travel all day, but they set off perhaps on Saturday evening, and arrive at home late on Sunday morning; or they leave home after tea on Sunday evening, and thus take only a part of the hallowed day from its destined purpose. This practice, it is to be feared, has much increased of late, and is become one of the prevailing sins of the religious world. Such persons deserve to be brought under the censures of the church.

Some persons are irregular in their attendance through the distance at which they live from their place of public worship. Oftentimes this is unavoidable; but it is a great inconsistency for professing Christians voluntarily to choose a residence which from its remoteness from the house of God must often deprive them of the communion of the saints. Such a disposition to sacrifice spiritual privileges to mere temporal enjoyment, does not afford much evidence that religion is with them the one thing needful, or that they have the mind of David, who thought the threshold of the sanctuary was to be preferred to the saloon and the park of the palace. Injurious as the practice necessarily must be to the individuals themselves, it is still more so to their servants and children.

Professing Christians should feel the obligations to attend week day services. Most ministers have often to complain, that they are half deserted on these occasions. Surely, with such hearts and amidst such circumstances as ours, it is too long to go from Sabbath to Sabbath without the aid of public worship. All persons have not the command of their own time; but in the case of those who have, the neglect is inexcusable, and argues a very low state of religion in the soul.

A minister has a right to expect his members at the meetings for social prayer. The Christian that neglects these betrays such an utter indifference to the interests of the church, and the comfort of the pastor, as well as so much lukewarmness in his own personal religion, as to be a fit subject for the exercise of discipline.

IV. Earnest prayer. How often and how earnestly did the great apostle of the Gentiles repeat that sentence which contained at once the authority of a command and the tenderness of a petition—"Brethren pray for us." In another place, he ascribes his deliverance and preservation to the prayers of the churches—"You also helping together by prayer for us." 2 Cor. i. 11. Surely then if this illustrious man was dependent upon, and indebted to the prayers of Christians, how much more so the ordinary ministers of Christ! Pray then for your ministers; for the increase of their intellectual attainments, spiritual qualifications, and ministerial success. Pray for them in your private approaches to the throne of grace; pray for them at the family altar; and thus teach your servants and children to respect and love them. Reasons both numerous and cogent enforce this duty. It is enjoined by divine authority. It is due to the arduous nature of their employment. Little do our churches know the number and magnitude of our temptations, discouragements, difficulties, and trials.

“’Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor’s care demands,
But what might fill an angel’s heart,
And fill’d a Saviour’s hands.”

Our office is no bed of down or of roses, on which the indolent may repose with careless indifference, or uninterrupted slumbers. Far, very far from it. Cares of oppressive weight; anxieties which can be known only by experience; labours of a mental kind almost too strong and incessant for the powers of mind to sustain, fall to our lot, and demand the prayerful sympathy of our flocks. And then as another claim for our people’s prayers, we might urge the consideration of their own interest, which is identified with all our efforts. We are to our people just what God makes us, and no more, and he is willing to make us almost what they ask. A regard to their own spiritual profit, if nothing else, should induce them to bear us much on their hearts before the throne of divine grace. Prayer is a means of assisting a minister which is within the reach of all. They who can do nothing more, can pray. The sick, who cannot encourage their minister by their presence in the sanctuary, can bear him upon their hearts in their lonely chamber: the poor who cannot add to his temporal comfort by pecuniary donations, can supplicate their God “to supply all his needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus:” the timid, who cannot approach to offer him the tribute of their gratitude, can pour their praises into the ear of Jehovah, and entreat him still to encourage the soul of his servant: the ignorant, who cannot hope to add one idea to the stock of his knowledge, can place him by prayer before the fountain of celestial radiance: even the dying, who can no longer busy themselves as aforetime for his interests, can gather up their remaining strength, and employ it in the way of prayer for their pastor.

Prayer, if it be sincere, always increases our affection for its object. We never feel even our dearest friends to be so dear, as when we have commended them to the goodness of God. It is the best extinguisher of enmity, and the best fuel for the flame of love. If some professing Christians were to take from the time they spend in praising their ministers, and others from that which they employ in blaming them, and both were to devote it to the act of praying for them, the former would find still more cause for admiration, and the latter far less reason for censure.

V. Members should encourage others to attend upon the ministry of their pastors.

Let us go up to the house of the Lord, is an invitation which they should often address to the people of the world, who either attend no place of worship at all, or where the truth is not preached. A minister cannot himself ask people to attend his place of worship, but those who are in the habit of hearing him can; and it is astonishing to what an extent the usefulness of private Christians may be carried in this way. I have received very many into the fellowship of the church under my care, who were first brought under the sound of the gospel by the kind solicitations of a pious neighbour. To draw away the hearers of one faithful preacher to another, is a despicable ambition—mere sectarian zeal: but to invite those who never hear the gospel, to listen to the joyful sound, is an effort worthy the mind of an angel. Shall sinners invite one another to iniquity—to the brothel, the theatre, the tavern—and Christians not attempt to draw them to the house of God? This is one way in which every member, of every church, may be the means of doing great good; the rich, the poor, male and female, masters and servants, young and old, have all some acquaintance over whom they may exert their influence; and how can it be better employed than in attracting them to those places “Where streams of heavenly mercy flow,

And words of sweet salvation sound?”

VI. It is incumbent on church members to make known to their pastor any thing of importance that occurs within the scope of their observation, or the course of their experience, relating to his church and congregation.

For instance, their own spiritual embarrassments, trials, temptations; the declensions, backslidings, and sins of others, which they imagine may have escaped his notice, and which they have first tried by their own personal efforts to remove. If they perceive any root of bitterness growing up, which they have not strength or skill enough to eradicate, it is then manifestly their duty to inform him of the circumstance. If they perceive any individual whose case has been overlooked, any one in circumstances which need sympathy or relief, any who are struggling with affliction, but are too modest or timid to disclose their situation: they should bring all such occurrences under his notice. Especially should they encourage by their own personal attentions, any persons in the congregation who appear to be under religious concern; in such cases they should put forth all their tenderest solicitude to shelter and cherish these hopeful beginnings, and introduce the subjects of them to their minister. There are some Christians—but do they indeed deserve the name?—who would see all the process of conversion going on in the very next seat to theirs, and observe the fixed attention, the anxious look, the tearful eye, the serious deportment—and all this repeated one Sabbath after another—without the least possible interest, or ever exchanging a single syllable with the inquiring penitent! Shame, shame on such professors! Can the love of Christ dwell in such cold and careless hearts? Can they have ever felt conviction of sin? How easy and how incumbent is it to introduce ourselves to such individuals; a word, a look, would be received with gratitude.

VII. Zealous co-operation in all schemes of usefulness proposed by the pastor, whether for the benefit of their own society in particular, or the welfare of the church, and the world at large, is the duty of Christians.

This is an age of restless activity, practical benevolence, and progressive improvement. One scheme of benefit often contains the germs of many more. The love of innovation and the dread of it, are equally remote from true wisdom. Zeal, when guided by wisdom, is a noble element of character, and the source of incalculable good. A church ought always to stand ready to support any scheme which is proved to their judgment to be beneficial either to themselves or others. It is most disheartening to ministers, to find all their efforts counteracted by that ignorance which can comprehend nothing strange, that bigotry which is attached to every thing old, by that timidity which starts at every thing new, or by that avarice which condemns every thing expensive. Usages and customs that are venerable for their antiquity, I admit, should not be touched by hot spirits and rude hands, lest in removing the sediment deposited by the stream of time at the base of the fabric, they should touch the foundation itself: But where the word of God is the line and the plummet; where this line is held by the hand of caution, and watched by the eye of wisdom; in such cases, innovation upon the customs of our churches is a blessing, and ought to receive the support of the people. It is a scandal to any Christian society, when the flame of ministerial zeal is allowed to burn, without enkindling a similar fire.

VIII. A most delicate and tender regard for the pastor's reputation. A minister's character is the lock of his strength; and if once this be sacrificed, he is like Samson shorn of his hair, a poor, feeble, faltering creature, the pity of his friends and the derision of his enemies. I would not have bad ministers screened, nor would I have good ones maligned. When a preacher of righteousness has stood in the way of sinners, and walked in the counsel of the ungodly, he should never again open his lips in the great congregation, until his repentance is as notorious as his sin. But while his character is unsullied, his friends should preserve it with as much care against the tongue of the slanderer, as they would his life against the hand of the assassin.

When I consider the restless malignity of the great enemy of God and holiness, and add to this his subtlety and craft; when I consider how much his malice would be gratified, and his schemes promoted, by blackening the character of the ministers of the gospel; when I consider what a multitude of creatures there are who are his vassals, and under his influence, creatures so destitute of moral principle, and so filled with venomous spite against religion, as to be prepared to go any lengths in maligning the righteous, and especially their ministers, I can account for it on no other ground than that of a special interposition of Providence, that the reputation of Christian pastors is not more frequently attacked by slander, and destroyed by calumny. But probably we see in this, as in other cases, that wise arrangement of Providence by which things of delicacy and consequence are preserved, by calling forth greater solicitude for their safety. Church members should therefore be tremblingly alive to the importance of defending their minister's character. They should neither expect to see him perfect, nor hunt after his imperfections. When they cannot but see his imperfections—imperfections which after all may be consistent with not only real, but eminent piety—they should not take pleasure in either magnifying or looking at them; but make all reasonable excuse for them, and endeavour to lose sight of his infirmities in his virtues, as they do the spots of the sun amidst the blaze of radiance with which they are surrounded. Let them not be the subject of conversation even between yourselves, much less before your children, servants, and the world. If you talk of his faults in derision, who will speak of his excellencies with admiration? Do not look at him with suspicion, but repose an honourable confidence in his character. Do not make him an offender for a word, and refuse to him that charity and candour of judgment, which would be granted to every one else. Do not magnify indiscretions into immoralities, and exact from him that absolute perfection, which in your own case you find to be unattainable. Beware of whispers, inuendoes, significant nods, and that slanderous silence, which is more defamatory than the broadest accusation.

Defend him against the groundless attacks of others. Never hear him spoken of with undeserved reproach, without indignantly repelling the shafts of calumny. Express your firm and dignified displeasure against the wittling that would make him ridiculous, the scorner that would render him contemptible, and the defamer that would brand him as immoral.

Especially guard against those creeping reptiles which infest our churches, and are perpetually insinuating that their ministers do not preach the gospel, merely because they do not incessantly repeat the same truths in the same words; because they do not allegorize and spiritualize all the facts of the Old Testament, until they have found as much gospel in the horses of Pharaoh's chariot as they can in Paul's epistles; and because they have dared to enforce the moral law as the rule of the believer's conduct. This Antinomian spirit has become the pest of many churches. It is the most mischievous and disgusting of all errors. If the heresies which abound in the spiritual world were to be represented by the noxious animals of the natural world, we could find some errors that would answer to the vulture, the tiger, and the serpent; but we could find nothing that would be an adequate emblem of Antinomianism, except by a creation of our own we had united in some monstrous reptile, the venom of the wasp, with the deformity of the spider, and the slime of the snail.

IX. Liberal support. The Scripture is very explicit on this head: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things," Gal. vi. 6 "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges?—even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel, should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. ix. 7, 14. The necessity of this appears from the injunctions delivered to ministers to devote themselves exclusively to the duties of their office. 2 Tim. ii. 4. 1 Tim. iv. 13, 15. I by no means contend that it is unlawful for a minister to engage in secular concerns; for necessity is a law which supersedes the ordinary rules of human conduct: And what are they to do, whose stipend is too small to support a family, and who have no private source of supply? A minister is under additional obligations to provide for things honest, not only in the sight of the Lord, but of men; to owe no man any thing, to provide for his own house; and if he is not enabled to do this by the liberality of his flock, and has no private fortune, he must have recourse to the labour of his hands. It is to the deep, and wide, and endless reproach of some churches, that although possessed of ability to support their pastors in comfort, they dole out but a wretched pittance from their affluence, leaving them to make up the deficiency by a school; and then with insulting cruelty complain that their sermons are very meagre, and have a great sameness. Such congregations, if they were treated as they deserve, would be put upon abstinence for at least a twelve month, or until they were willing to support their pastor in comfort. They love him dearly with their lips, but hate him as cordially with their pockets. They keep him poor to keep him humble, forgetting that as humility is no less necessary for themselves than for him, this is an argument why the articles which minister to their pride, should be retrenched in order to support his comfort. This is certainly not drawing them with the cords of love and the bands of a man, but treating them like animals who are tained into submission by hunger, and kept humble by being kept poor. It is curious to hear how some persons will entreat God to bless their minister in his basket and his store, while alas ! poor man, they have taken care that his basket should be empty, and his store nothingness itself. Is not this mocking both God and his minister with a solemn sound upon a thoughtless tongue ?

Many rich Christians spend more in the needless wine they individually drink, than they contribute towards the support of their pastor; and others give more for the sugar that sweetens their tea, than they do for all the advantages of public worship. A reproach of this kind yet rests upon multitudes, which it is high time should be rolled away.

It is extremely difficult, where a matter of this kind must be left to voluntary contribution, and the dictates of individual liberty, to lay down particular rules; all that can be done, is, to state general principles, and leave these to operate in particular cases. Let all Christians therefore consider what is a just and generous reward for the labours of a man, who is devoting his life to assist them in obtaining an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory:—who, in assisting them to gain eternal life, exerts at the same time an indirect, but a beneficial influence upon all their temporal prosperity—who by his ministrations, soothes their cares, lightens their sorrows, mortifies their sins, throws a radiance over their darkest scenes, and gilds their brightest ones with additional splendour? who brings heaven down to earth for their comfort, and elevates them from earth to heaven; and who, after mitigating for them the ills of time with an anticipation of the joys of eternity, is prepared to attend them to the verge of the dark valley, and irradiate its gloom with the visions of immortality.

Let it not be thought that what is given to a minister is a charitable donation; it is the payment of a just debt. It is what Christ claims for his faithful servants, and which cannot be withheld without robbery. I spurn for myself and for my brethren, the degrading apprehension that we are supported by charity. We are not pensioners upon mere bounty. Our appeal is to justice; and if our claims are denied on this ground, we refuse to plead before any other tribunal, and refer the matter to the great assize

MINISTERIAL GIFTS

TO BE SOUGHT OUT AND ENCOURAGED.

ADDRESSED TO THE CHURCHES

PERMIT us, dear brethren, to ask your attention to a subject, which yields not, in point of importance, to any other connected with your duties and your welfare.

We need say nothing concerning the rank which the Christian ministry occupies among the means by which the Saviour's kingdom is to be spread through the earth. Nor need we inform you, that the number of faithful ministers is now inadequate to supply our churches at home, while there are many fields in our own land which are white unto the harvest, and heathen countries appeal to us, by their crimes and miseries, to send them the messengers of salvation.

It appears to us that this deficiency of ministers must be attributed to a neglect of duty on the part of the churches. We cannot suppose that God is inattentive to the wants of his church and of the world, and purposely withholds a competent supply of ministers.

Wrong notions, it is believed, exist concerning the nature of a call to the ministry, and in regard to the duty of the churches to seek out and foster ministerial talent.

We firmly believe that no man ought to enter into the ministry, whom God has not called to the service. But the question is, how is the call of God to be ascertained? That a miraculous intimation of his will is to be expected, no rational man, at the present day, believes. This will must, then, be learned from the feelings which the Holy Spirit produces in the mind of the individual himself; from the gifts of heart and of intellect with which he is endowed; from the course of providence; and from other circumstances.

Two things are necessary to prove a call to the ministry to be from God. The first is, that the individual possess a sincere desire to be thus employed. He must feel a strong concern for the glory of God, and for the salvation of men. His heart must be moved with desires to proclaim the love of Christ to dying sinners, and to persuade them to be reconciled to God. He must feel such an impulse of soul towards this point—such a concentration of his thoughts and affections—that he cannot, with a quiet mind, engage in any other employment. He must be willing to part with prospects of emolument, and to forego all worldly advantages, for the sake of his Saviour and of his fellow men. These are some of the feelings which will occupy the heart of a man, whom God designs for the ministry. Of these feelings the individual himself is the only judge, because he alone can determine whether they are sincere, strong and permanent.

But another necessary thing is, that he possess suitable gifts. We mean not, that he must be qualified immediately to preach, because no man is qualified to preach with profit, until his mind has been furnished with adequate knowledge, and he has learned how to communicate that knowledge. By suitable gifts we mean a sound understanding, a capacity and a desire to learn, an aptitude to teach, a reasonable degree of ability to be useful to his fellow men as a minister, when his mind shall have been cultivated as much as circumstances may allow.

Of these points, the individual is not a competent judge. His brethren must judge for him. The church has thus a duty to perform. She ought to watch the character and conduct of her young men. An individual, whom God designs for the ministry, will usually show the bent of his disposition, by his zeal for the support of Sabbath schools, by his pertinent exhortations in the conference room, and by his prayers in social meetings. If the ministerial spirit exist within him, it will find occasion to display itself; and in most cases, a church is convinced of the call of a young man to the ministry as soon as he is himself, and sometimes sooner. In such cases as this, it is the duty of pastors, deacons, and other members of the church, to converse with such persons, to inquire concerning their feelings, and to give them all proper encouragement. If the individuals have themselves been thoughtful and anxious concerning their duty, such an affectionate and judicious conversation may remove their doubts, and confirm their decisions, by bringing in aid of their own convictions, the opinions of their brethren.

It is believed that a very different course is frequently pursued. Young men are left to struggle with their feelings without one word of advice or encouragement. The more modest they are, and therefore the more deserving of sympathy, the more reluctant they are to disclose their feelings, lest they should be attributed to pride and presumption. A sense of unfitness, the greatness of the work, doubts concerning duty, all throng upon the mind, and often produce inconceivable distress, which one word of kind sympathy and advice from a pastor or Christian friend would remove. Many young men, it cannot be doubted, are overcome by these anxieties, doubts, and fears, and relinquish the thought of the ministry, who ought to preach the gospel. It is a mistake to suppose, that if it be a man's duty to preach, he will force his way through every obstacle. A man may neglect his duty to preach, as he may neglect any other duty; and he is the more liable to neglect this duty, because the conscientious mind will consider it as a far less sin to refuse to preach, though it be a duty, than to preach when it is not. If his doubts preponderate in the smallest degree, the mind of a conscientious man will be very liable to abandon the design; and thus the very best ministers may be lost to the church.

But if a young man surmounts his doubts and discouragements, and makes his case known to his brethren, he is sometimes treated with cold suspicion, and obstacles are thrown in his way on purpose to test the strength of his zeal. If, at last, by dint of perseverance, he forces the church to give him a license, so much time may have been wasted, that it is too late to enter upon the work with advantage.

There may be cases, too, in which a young man may not have thought of the ministry, who may nevertheless furnish evidence of piety, talents and zeal, which would make him useful as a minister. It is undoubtedly the duty of pastors and Christians to converse with such a person, in a judicious manner; to inquire respecting his feelings; to ask him if it is not his duty to preach the gospel; to urge him to reflect and pray on the subject; to invite him to speak and to pray in conference and prayer meetings, and thus give his mind a direction towards the object. No reason can be given, why it is not as much our duty to use the proper means in this case, as it is to persuade a sinner to be reconciled to God; and God may, in both cases, employ us as instruments to accomplish his will.

We think, brethren, that there has been, and still is, a failure in duty, on this subject, among our churches. We earnestly entreat you to think of these suggestions, and let your attention be more directed to the young men among you. Let not selfishness induce you to detain them from their duty. The cause of God needs ministers. Millions of our fellow men are dying every year, without any one to tell them of the love of Jesus. Let, then, every young man in our churches, inquire, with a prayerful heart, Is it not my duty to preach the gospel? Let every church be a faithful and affectionate nursing mother to the young servants to the Redeemer.

But, brethren, have we not neglected the yet more important duty, to pray for an increase of ministers. While we hold fast the belief, that God alone can call and qualify his true ministers, does not consistency, as well as piety, require us to offer continual and importunate prayer, that he will bestow on his churches the inestimable gift of faithful pastors and teachers, and commission a sufficient number of evangelists, who may preach the unsearchable riches of Christ in destitute places and in heathen countries? Our Saviour has said, with special emphasis, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." Let us henceforth pray more for this blessing, and for help to perform the duty which has been insisted on in this tract. Thus may our efforts accompany our prayers, and God, even our own God will bless us, and grant us the desire of our hearts.

American Baptist Publication and S. S. Society, 21 South Fourth st., Phila.

B R I E F H I S T O R Y
O F T H E
A M E R I C A N B A P T I S T M I S S I O N
I N B U R M A H .

IN the month of February, 1812, five young men, who had formerly been fellow-students at Andover, sailed from this country to commence a foreign mission under the patronage of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. It was owing to their urgent solicitations and moving appeals, that the churches were aroused, and this first Board of Missions constituted. They sailed for Calcutta with instructions to proceed to Burmah, if it were judged practicable to establish a mission there; and as they were the earliest missionaries from this land, they would of course hasten at once to Serampore, to obtain the sympathies and advice of the venerable men who had so long been laboring in the field. Mr. Judson, who was one of the company, reflected during the voyage, that the Serampore brethren were Baptists; and supposed very naturally, that he might be called, while sharing their hospitalities, to defend the Pedobaptist opinions which he professed. Such anticipations led him to a careful re-examination of the grounds of his faith, and, eventually, to a thorough change in his views. After a very serious and reluctant struggle, Mrs. Judson was compelled by a consciousness of right, and the clear demonstrations of the New Testament, to join her husband. Accordingly, they were both baptized and admitted to the church at Calcutta, September 6th, 1812. Mr. Rice who had sailed in another ship and arrived somewhat later, was the subject, without the slightest concert, of a similar change of feelings, and was baptized in November. This event led naturally to a dissolution of the connexion of Messrs. Judson and Rice with the Board under whose patronage they went out, and threw them upon their own resources, or the event of some new arrangements at home. A spirit of opposition to their enterprize, which manifested itself at Calcutta, and the peremptory refusal of the East India Company to suffer their continuance within their dominions, led the missionaries to embark for the Isle of France. While at this place, Messrs. Judson and Rice thought it expedient that the latter should return at once to this country, and endeavor to awaken a spirit of missions among the Baptist churches.

He accordingly sailed in March, 1813, and was welcomed on his arrival in the United States, with great cordiality and affection. He was soon instrumental in awakening an extensive missionary feeling, and a large number of missionary societies were originated in various parts of the country; and in April, 1814, the BAPTIST GENERAL CONVENTION was formed in Philadelphia.

The will of Providence was, perhaps, never more distinctly intelligible, than in the circumstances which led to the establishment of the American Baptist mission in the Burman empire. Mr. Judson received no encouragement in respect to the station, from his friends at Serampore. The ground had already been tried. But such were the obstructions, resulting from a barbarous nation of idolaters, a despotic government, where change of religion in a native would be visited with death, and a language of difficult acquisition, that all former attempts had failed. The missionaries, few in number, who had been deputed by the Serampore brethren to go thither, had left in discouragement, and gone to other fields. Not a native had listened to the word of eternal life. Of the good seed of the kingdom, none had been sown. After long deliberation as to the course which they should pursue in their present embarrassing and unforeseen condition, Mr. and Mrs. Judson resolved to attempt a mission at Penang or Prince of Wales' Island, situated on the coast of Malacca, and inhabited by Malays. As no passage to that island could be obtained from the Isle of France, they sailed for Madras in May, 1813, with the hope of obtaining a passage thence to Penang. But here they were disappointed. No passage to that place could be procured. Fearful that the English government in Bengal, would, on learning their arrival, send them to England, they resolved, after a stay at Madras of a few days, to take passage in a vessel bound to Rangoon. Thus by a wonderful series of providential occurrences, they were impelled, contrary to their expectations and plans, to the Burman empire; and, amid hazard and discouragement, Mr. Judson resolved, in the name of God, there to set up the Christian banner.

RANGOON.

Mr. Judson arrived at Rangoon in July, 1813. On his arrival, he found a mission-house, occupied by the family of Mr. Felix Carey, which now became his home. Mr. C. soon left the station for an office under government; and thus the mission was abandoned into the hands of the American Baptist Board.

In October, 1816, Mr. and Mrs. Hough joined the mission family at Rangoon, having left the United States the preceding December.

In March, 1817, four years after the commencement of the mission, the first inquirer presented himself to Mr. Judson. His appearance and manners excited high hopes; and, at the close of his first visit, the mission family felt, that there was reason to thank God and take courage.

In September, 1818, Messrs. Colman and Wheelock, who had sailed from Boston in November, 1817, were added to the mission family at Rangoon. Mr. Judson had already completed the translation of the gospel by Matthew, and a zayat was built for religious worship, where he sat from day to day, to converse with all who came, on the things of the kingdom. The zayat was erected on a road, lined on both sides with pagodas; and hence called Pagoda-Road.

On the 27th of June, 1819, the first baptism occurred in the Burman empire. Mounge Nau, the subject of it, gave a most satisfactory and interesting account of his mental exercises, and was admitted, with an unspeakably joyful welcome, to baptism and the church.

This first baptism seemed like the first fruits of a revival. The number of inquirers began to multiply, and at some meetings, especially of the females, the Holy Spirit was evidently present. On the 7th of November following, two more converts were baptized. Individuals of rank and eminence were becoming zealous inquirers, and the holiest anticipations of the missionaries seemed on the point of being realized. But such was their success, that the fame of their operations could not be kept from the ears of the emperor. Fearing the worst temporal consequences, praying for divine guidance, and pursuing what seemed to be the only course expedient, Messrs. Judson and Colman left Rangoon for Ava, the capital of the country, to seek the imperial favor and toleration, and safety for the baptized Burmans. Their petition, however, was disregarded, their hopes were blighted, and they returned to tell the sad tidings to their converts. They had previously arranged that Mr. Colman should go to Chittagong, a place under British protection, so that in case of the worst, all the missionaries might find there an asylum from persecution. They expected, when they disclosed their ill success to the disciples, that they would be filled with apprehensions, and perhaps be ready to renounce their Christian profession. But, on the contrary, they remained steadfast in the faith, and seemed willing that the will of the Lord should be done. "Only stay with us," they exclaimed, "till there are ten converts; then one can teach the rest; and the emperor himself will not be able to destroy the new religion."

Mr. Colman shortly after went to Chittagong. Mr. Wheelock, whose health soon failed, died on his passage to Bengal, whither he was going for medical aid. Mr. Hough was at Serampore, superintending the printing of a Burman tract. Mrs. Judson's health had become so impaired, that a voyage to Calcutta became indispensable. And so feeble was she before the time for her departure arrived, that Mr. Judson felt it necessary that he should accompany her. Thus the station must be left awhile without a missionary—the dependant sheep, led by no earthly shepherd.

But through the tender mercy of God, before the ship could get away, seven more Burmans gave satisfactory evidence of a change of heart, and applied for baptism. They were accepted by the church, and added to the little band of believers ; so that the proposed ten was now filled.

While at Calcutta, Mrs. Judson's health gradually recovered, and she returned to Rangoon with her husband, in January, 1821. Soon after their return, another convert was baptized, Mounng Ing, who is now a native pastor. During the absence of the missionaries, he had been endeavoring to spread among his friends the knowledge of a crucified Saviour.

In November, 1821, Dr. Price, with his family, arrived to join the mission. Just as he landed, Mrs. Judson, in consequence of returning illness, was forced to leave all the endearments of that land of her affections, and return to America. She proceeded by the way of England. Having visited different sections of this country, and spent the winter at Baltimore, where she prepared for the press a history of the Burman mission, her health was so far recovered that she was able to return to Rangoon the following summer. After being instrumental in thus enlisting many affections in the Burman mission, both at home and in England, she sailed again for India. She was accompanied in her return by Mr. and Mrs. Wade, who were appointed to join the station at Rangoon. They sailed from Boston in June, and arrived at Calcutta, October 19th ; soon after which they sailed for their final destination.

Ava. As the history of the station at Ava forms a kind of episode in the history of that at Rangoon, this seems to be the fittest place for its introduction. Soon after the arrival of Dr. Price, intelligence of his medical skill was conveyed to the capital. He was immediately summoned to wait on the emperor. Hoping that a favorable opportunity might now open for the introduction of the gospel into the heart of the realm, Mr. Judson resolved to accompany the Doctor. Government-boats were furnished at the public expense, and they were received with respect and kindness. Upon their arrival, Dr. Price was authorized to build himself a house, where he might live on terms of familiarity with the public officers, and in the enjoyment of perfect toleration. Until the country was thrown into a state of commotion, he was able indirectly to advance the objects of his mission. His medical skill rendered him an object of favor and respect, and it was fondly hoped, that, in this golden* city, the grand point of attraction to the Burman empire, the church of Christ was about to be established on a basis which could not be shaken.

But events were destined soon to occur, which nipped the hopes of Christians in the bud. A war between the British and Burmese governments commenced about this period, which rendered the missionaries objects of suspicion and ill will. Because their language was the same, and their pecuniary affairs were transacted through British agents, they were imagined to be spies for England. As the armies of the East India Company advanced from town to town, Messrs. Judson and Price were seized and imprisoned, and treated with the utmost severity. For a year and seven months, they were held in confinement; often driven by savage persecutors from prison to prison; immured in the death-prison, and saved from a violent death only by the interposition of a friendly Governor, and the constant intercessions of Mrs. Judson.

A few passages are extracted from Mrs. Judson's narrative of the scenes through which the missionaries passed during the war.†

“On the 8th of June, just as we were preparing for dinner, in rushed an officer, holding a black book,

* When anything belonging to the emperor is mentioned, the epithet “golden” is attached to it. When he is said to have heard anything, “it has reached the golden ears;” a person admitted to his presence “has been at the golden feet;” the perfume of roses is described as grateful to “the golden nose.”

† For a detailed account of these events, the reader is referred to the Memoir of Mrs. Judson, where will be found an extended history of appalling sufferings, every sentence of which possesses the most intense and thrilling interest.

with a dozen Burmans, accompanied by one, whom, from his spotted face, we knew to be an executioner, and a 'son of the prison.' 'Where is the teacher?' was the first inquiry. Mr. Judson presented himself. 'You are called by the King,' said the officer; a form of speech always used when about to arrest a criminal. The spotted man instantly seized Mr. Judson, threw him on the floor, and produced the small cord, the instrument of torture. I caught hold of his arm; 'Stay, (said I,) I will give you money.' 'Take her too,' said the officer; 'she also is a foreigner.' Mr. Judson, with an imploring look, begged they would let me remain till further orders. The scene was now shocking beyond description. The whole neighborhood had collected—the little Burman children were screaming and crying—the Bengalee servants stood in amazement at the indignities offered their master—and the hardened executioner, with a kind of hellish joy, drew tight the cords, bound Mr. Judson fast, and dragged him off I knew not whither. In vain I begged and entreated the spotted face to take the silver, and loosen the ropes; but he spurned my offers, and immediately departed. I gave the money, however, to Moug Ing to follow after, and make some further attempt to mitigate the torture of Mr. Judson; but instead of relieving their prisoner, when a few rods from the house, the unfeeling wretches again threw him on the ground, and drew the cords still tighter, so as almost to prevent respiration.

"The officer and his gang proceeded on to the court-house, where the Governor of the city and officers were collected, one of whom read the order of the King, to commit Mr. Judson to the death-prison into which he was soon hurled, the door closed—and Moug Ing saw no more. What a night was now before me! I retired into my room, and endeavored to obtain consolation from committing my case to God, and imploring fortitude and strength to suffer whatever awaited me. But the consolation of retirement was not long allowed me, for the magistrate of the place had come into the verandah, and continually called me to come out, and submit to his examination.

I did so, and he inquired very minutely of everything I knew ; then ordered the gates of the compound to be shut, no person to be allowed to go in or out, placed a guard of ten ruffians, to whom he gave a strict charge to keep me safe, and departed.

“ It was now dark. I retired to an inner room with my four little Burman girls, and barred the doors. The guard instantly ordered me to unbar the doors and come out, or they would break the house down, and seemed resolved to annoy me as much as possible. My unprotected, desolate state, my entire uncertainty of the fate of Mr. Judson, and the dreadful carousings and almost diabolical language of the guard, all conspired to make it by far the most distressing night I had ever passed. You may well imagine, my dear brother, that sleep was a stranger to my eyes, and peace and composure to my mind.

“ The next morning, I sent Moug Ing to ascertain the situation of your brother, and give him food, if still living. He soon returned with the intelligence that Mr. Judson, and all the white foreigners, were confined in the death prison, with three pairs of iron fetters each, and fastened to a long pole, to prevent their moving! The point of my anguish now was, that I was a prisoner myself, and could make no efforts for the release of the missionaries. I begged and entreated the magistrate to allow me to go to some member of government to state my case ; but he said he did not dare to consent, for fear I should make my escape. I next wrote a note to one of the King's sisters, with whom I had been intimate, requesting her to use her influence for the release of the teachers. The note was returned with this message—She ‘ did not understand it,’—which was a polite refusal to interfere ; though I afterwards ascertained that she had an anxious desire to assist us, but dared not on account of the Queen. The day dragged heavily away, and another dreadful night was before me. I endeavored to soften the feelings of the guard, by giving them tea and segars for the night ; so that they allowed me to remain inside of my room, without threatening as they did the night before. But the idea of your brother being stretched on the bare floor in irons and confinement, haunted my mind like a spectre, and prevented my obtaining any quiet sleep, though nature was almost exhausted.

“On the third day, I sent a message to the Governor of the city, who has the entire direction of prison affairs, to allow me to visit him with a present. This had the desired effect; and he immediately sent orders to the guards, to permit my going into town. The Governor received me pleasantly, and asked me what I wanted. I stated to him the situation of the foreigners, and particularly that of the teachers, who were Americans, and had nothing to do with the war. He told me it was not in his power to release them from prison or irons, but that he could make their situation more comfortable; there was his head officer, with whom I must consult, relative to the means. The officer, who proved to be one of the city writers, and whose countenance at the first glance presented the most perfect assemblage of all the evil passions attached to human nature, took me aside, and endeavored, to convince me, that myself, as well as the prisoners, was entirely at his disposal—that our future comfort must depend on my liberality in regard to presents—and that these must be made in a private way, and unknown to any officer in the government! What must I do, said I, to obtain a mitigation of the present sufferings of the two teachers? ‘Pay to me,’ said he, ‘two hundred tickals, (about a hundred dollars,) two pieces of fine cloth, and two pieces of handkerchiefs.’ I had taken money with me in the morning, our house being two miles from the prison—I could not easily return. This I offered to the writer, and begged he would not insist on the other articles, as they were not in my possession. He hesitated for sometime, but fearing to lose the sight of so much money, he concluded to take it, promising to relieve the teachers from their most painful situation.

“I then procured an order from the Governor for my admittance into prison; but the sensations produced by meeting your brother in that wretched, horrid situation, and the affecting scene which ensued, I will not attempt to describe. Mr Judson crawled to the door of the prison—for I was not allowed to enter—gave me some directions relative to his release; but before we could make any arrangement, I was ordered to depart, by those iron-hearted jailers, who could not endure to see us enjoy the poor consolation of meeting in that miserable place. In vain I pleaded the order from the Governor for my admittance; they again harshly repeated, ‘Depart, or we will pull you out.’ The same evening, the missionaries, together with the other foreigners, who paid an equal sum, were taken out of the common prison, and confined in an open shed in the prison enclosure. Here I was allowed to send them food, and mats to sleep on; but was not permitted to enter again for several days.”

Mrs. Judson was now continually annoyed and terrified by the movements of government and petty officers; the mission-house was searched by official order, and its contents confiscated, though not all removed. For several succeeding months, she was unwearied in her efforts to procure the release of her husband and Dr. Price, to supply them with food, to effect a mitigation of their sufferings, or a reprieve from immediate execution. The birth of a daughter during this distracting period, adds an interest to the events which needs no comment.

“During these seven months, the continual extortions and oppressions to which your brother, and the other white prisoners were subject, are indescribable. Sometimes sums of money were demanded, sometimes pieces of cloth, and handkerchiefs; at other times, an order would be issued that the white foreigners should not speak to each other, or have any communication with their friends without. Then, again, the servants were forbidden to carry in their food, without an extra fee. Sometimes, for days and days together, I could not go into the prison till after dark, when I had two miles to walk, in returning to the house. O how many, many times, have I returned from that dreary prison at nine o’clock at night, solitary and worn out with fatigue and anxiety, and endeavored to invent some new scheme for the release of the prisoners. Sometimes, for a moment or two, my thoughts would glance toward America, and my beloved friends there—but for nearly a year and a half, so entirely engrossed was every thought with present scenes and sufferings, that I seldom reflected on a single occurrence of my former life, or recollected that I had a friend in existence out of Ava.

“You, my dear brother, can judge from the above circumstances, how intense were my sufferings. But the point, the acme of my distress, consisted in the awful uncertainty of our final fate. My prevailing opinion was, that my husband would suffer violent death; and that I should, of course, become a slave, and languish out a miserable, though short existence, in the tyrannic hands of some unfeeling monster. But the consolations of religion, in these trying circumstances, were neither ‘few nor small.’ It taught me to look beyond this world, to that rest, that peaceful, happy rest, where Jesus reigns, and oppression never enters.

Sometimes Mrs. J. procured for the prisoners a partial relief, but it was only temporary, and then some fresh instance of oppression would occur, renewing her most fearful apprehensions. Such an instance is narrated below. She had been permitted to make for Mr. J. a little bamboo room in the prison enclosures, where he was allowed to spend portions of his time, and she could occasionally sit with him. One morning he “sent me word that he and all the white prisoners were put into the inner prison, in five pairs of fetters each, that his little room had been torn down, and his mat, pillow, &c. been taken by the jailers. This was to me a dreadful shock, as I thought at once it was only a prelude to greater evils.

“I was determined to see the Governor, and know the cause of this additional oppression; and for this purpose returned into town the same evening, at an hour I knew he would be at home. He was in his audience room, and, as I entered, looked up without speaking, but exhibited a mixture of shame and affecting anger in his countenance. I began by saying, Your Lordship has hitherto treated us with the kindness of a father. Our obligations to you are very great. We have looked to you for protection from oppression and cruelty. You have in many instances mitigated the sufferings of those unfortunate, though innocent beings committed to your charge. You have promised me particularly, that you would stand by me to the last, and though you should receive an order from the king, you would not put Mr. J. to death. What crime has he committed to deserve such additional punishment? The old man's hard heart was melted, for he wept like a child. 'I pity you, Tsa-yar-ga-dau, (a name by which he always called me) I knew you would make me feel; I therefore forbade your application. But you must believe me when I say, I do not wish to increase the sufferings of the prisoners. When I am ordered to execute them, the least that I can do is, to put them out of sight. I will now tell you (continued he) what I have never told you before, that three times I have received intimations from the Queen's brother, to assassinate all the white prisoners privately; but I would not do it. And I now repeat it, though I execute all the others, I will never execute your husband. But I cannot release him from his present confinement, and you must not ask it.' I had never seen him manifest so much feeling, or so resolute in denying me a favor; which circumstance was an additional reason for thinking dreadful scenes were before us.

“The situation of the prisoners was now distressing beyond description. It was at the commencement of the hot season. There were above a hundred prisoners shut up in one room, without a breath of air, excepting from the cracks in the boards. I sometimes obtained permission to go to the door for five minutes, when my heart sickened at the wretchedness exhibited. The white prisoners, from incessant perspiration and loss of appetite, looked more like the dead than the living. I made daily applications to the Governor, offering him money, which he refused;

but all that I gained, was permission for the foreigners to eat their food outside, and this continued but a short time.

“After continuing in the inner prison for more than a month, your brother was taken with a fever. I felt assured he would not live long, unless removed from that noisome place. The Governor, being worn out with my entreaties, at length gave me the order in an official form, to take Mr. J. out of the large prison, and place him in a more comfortable situation; and also gave orders to the head jailer, to allow me to go in and out, all times of the day, to administer medicines, &c. I now felt happy indeed, and had Mr. J. instantly removed into a little bamboo hovel, so low that neither of us could stand upright—but a palace in comparison with the place he had left.”

Again she says, “I used to carry Mr. J.’s food myself, for the sake of getting in, and would then remain an hour or two, unless driven out. We had been in this comfortable situation but two or three days, when one morning, having carried in Mr. Judson’s breakfast, which, in consequence of fever, he was unable to take, I remained longer than usual, when the Governor in great haste sent for me. I promised him to return as soon as I had ascertained the Governor’s will, he being much alarmed at this unusual message. I was very agreeably disappointed, when the Governor informed me that he only wished to consult me about his watch, and seemed unusually pleasant and conversable. I found afterwards that his only object was to detain me until the dreadful scene about to take place in the prison, was over. For when I left him to go to my room, one of the servants came running, and with a ghastly countenance, informed me that all the white prisoners were carried away.”

After several hours of agonizing suspense, she learned their destination, and resolved to follow them. The Governor, who commiserated her condition, said to her, “‘You can do nothing more for your husband, take care of yourself.’ With a heavy heart I went to my room, and having no hope to excite me to exertion, I sunk down almost in despair. For several days previous, I had been actively engaged in building my own little room, and making our hovel comfortable. My thoughts had been almost entirely occupied in contriving means to get into prison. But now I looked towards the gate with a kind of melancholy feeling, but no wish to enter. All was the stillness of death, no preparation of your brother's food, no expectation of meeting him at the usual dinner hour, all my employment, all my occupations seemed to have ceased, and I had nothing left but the dreadful recollection that Mr. Judson was carried off, I knew not whither. It was one of the most insupportable days I ever passed."

After a distressing ride the next day, with her infant in her arms, she reached "that never to be forgotten place, Oung-pen-la." There she found the white prisoners; but it were vain to attempt a sketch of the agonies under which they had been goaded thither by iron-hearted monsters. For these particulars, as well as a narrative of a six months' residence at that place, the reader is referred to Mrs. Judson's Memoir. Her own personal, bodily distresses were seemingly beyond human endurance; for amidst privations, toils, and dangers, she was seized with an illness which continued more than two months, during which, a Bengalee male servant was the only attendant for herself, her sick child, and Mr. J., who was likewise ill in prison. At length, the Burmese government, alarmed by the rapid approach of the English army toward the "golden city," sent an order for Mr. J.'s release and instant removal to the camp, that he might negotiate a peace. This, after considerable delay, was effected; and one condition of it being an immediate discharge of all the foreigners held in confinement by his Burman Majesty, the missionaries were set at liberty, and placed under British protection.

One additional fact illustrative of the savage spirit by which those were actuated, on whose tender mercies the missionaries were dependent, and exhibiting the protecting care of an over-ruling Providence, must not be omitted.

Sometime after their arrival at Oung-pen-la, they learned that the white foreigners had been sent there for the express purpose of being sacrificed. An officer who had just come into favor with the Emperor, had ordered this, and it was only delayed that he might be present to witness the horrid scene. But while he was preparing an army to march against the English, he was suspected of high treason, and instantly executed, without the least examination.

Missionary efforts throughout the country were suspended for a long and gloomy period ; and if the God of missions were not the wise and glorious governor of the universe, accomplishing his own purposes in the most mysterious ways, this might have seemed the death-blow of our efforts in that region. After the war, Dr. Price remained at Ava. Here he had under his instruction the sons of some of the highest officers of government. His journals narrate several interesting conversations with the young princes. He lectured to them on various branches of natural philosophy, and intermingled and deduced arguments and reasons for the religion of the Bible. But in the midst of his usefulness, God saw fit to take him from the service of earth to the purer and holier services of heaven. He died, near Ava, in February, 1828. The station was not resumed till April, 1833, when Rev. E. Kincaid left Rangoon for that place.

At the commencement of the war, Messrs. Wade and Hough, the only missionaries at Rangoon, were ordered to execution ; and their lives were saved only by the cowardice of their Burman oppressors. When they were liberated by the advance of the British army, they sailed immediately for Calcutta, to await the course of events. During this interval in their work, Mr. Wade superintended the printing of a Burman dictionary, prepared chiefly by Mr. Judson ; and thus accomplished an invaluable service for future missionaries.

After an absence of two years and three months, the missionaries returned to Rangoon. Some of the disciples were dead ; and of some, no news could be obtained. A few were anxiously waiting to know the plans of their spiritual leaders, designing wherever they should go, to go with them. None, it is believed, had apostatized from the steadfastness of their faith.

In consequence of the arrangements of the British government, it was thought proper to leave the station at Rangoon for a while, and establish one in its stead at Amherst, to which a large proportion of the population had removed. It was supposed this town would become the capital of the Company's possessions gained by the war. Schools were here established, which began to give much encouragement—especially the school for girls, under the care of Mrs. Wade. But the British garrison was eventually removed to Maulmein, and the town of Amherst suffered to decay. The population gradually retired, and finally, the missionaries also—regretting the change most of all, because it removed them from the place where rest the ashes of Mrs. Judson, and from which, in October, 1826, her spirit ascended to the Redeemer.

Mr. Judson, at the time of her death, was at Ava, whither he had accompanied an Embassy from the English Government. He thus writes of Mrs. J's. death to her mother :

“ I left your daughter, my beloved wife, at Amherst, the 5th of July last, in good health, comfortably situated, happy in being out of the reach of our savage oppressors, and animated in prospect of a field of missionary labor opening under the auspices of British protection. It affords me some comfort, that she not only consented to my leaving her, for the purpose of joining the present embassy to Ava, but uniformly gave her advice in favor of the measure, whenever I hesitated concerning my duty. Accordingly, I left her. After my arrival at Ava, I received several letters from her, written in her usual style, and exhibiting no subject of regret or apprehension, except the declining health of our little daughter Maria.”

After mentioning a letter from the English Superintendent at Amherst, which, though it spoke of Mrs. Judson's being slightly ill, was yet of such a tenor as to make his “mind quite at ease, both as it regarded the mother and the child," he says :—"My next communication was a letter with a black seal, handed me by a person, saying he was sorry to inform me of the death of the child. I know not whether this was a mistake on his part, or kindly intended to prepare my mind for the real intelligence. I went into my room, and opened the letter with feelings of gratitude and joy, that at any rate the mother was spared. It was from Mr. B—, Assistant Superintendant of Amherst, dated the 26th of October, and began thus :

"My dear Sir, to one who has suffered so much, and with such exemplary fortitude, there needs but little preface to tell a tale of distress. It were cruel indeed to torture you with doubt and suspense. To sum up the unhappy tidings in a few words—Mrs. Judson is no more.'

"At intervals, I got through with the dreadful letter—"

The subjoined particulars, are from a subsequent letter to the same person, after his return to Amherst.

"I have been on a visit to the physician who attended her in her illness. I am now convinced that everything possible was done; and that had I been present myself, I could not have essentially contributed to avert the fatal termination of the disease. He says, that from the first attack of the fever, she was persuaded she should not recover; but that her mind was uniformly tranquil and happy in the prospect of death. She only expressed occasional regret at leaving her child, the native Christians, and the schools, before her husband or another missionary family could arrive. The last two days she was free from pain. On her attention being roused by reiterated questions, she replied, 'I feel quite well, only very weak.' These were her last words.

"The doctor is decidedly of opinion that the fatal termination of the fever is to be ascribed to the weakness of her constitution, occasioned by severe privations and long protracted sufferings which she endured at Ava. Oh, with what meekness, patience, magnanimity, and Christian fortitude, she bore those sufferings! And can I wish they had been less? Can I sacrilegiously wish to rob her crown of a single gem?"

Moung Thah-a, a native convert, commenced preaching at Rangoon, after the war, and several persons were converted. The missionaries at Maulmein were so well satisfied with his character and qualifications, that they ordained him, in January, 1829, pastor of the Rangoon native church. His success has been very pleasing. During the year 1831, seven new converts were baptized, and the state of religion became more interesting. On the arrival of Mr. J. T. Jones, in Feb. 1831, the station was again taken under the charge of our missionaries, and the native preachers labored under their direction. Mr. Jones or Mr. Judson, for a considerable time, supplied the station, and gave away daily a large amount of tracts.

The effects already produced, and which, with the blessing of God, are likely to follow a free circulation of these and corresponding publications, may be imagined from the following facts, selected from many reported in the journals of the missionaries. Mr. Kincaid says, June 28, 1832, "Within this immediate district, there are many inquirers; and for four weeks, I have had many visitors from the interior of the country. By these individuals, I learn that in many places, there is considerable excitement about the new religion, and that this excitement has been produced by reading the tracts and portions of the Scripture, which have been carried away by persons visiting this city. One person from Thong-oo, about 200 miles from this, has come for the purpose of knowing what he shall do to be saved. His eyes are open, and he is filled with admiration and love. He is one of the government men in that city, and a person of superior understanding. He says he knows many there, who are convinced that this is the true religion. Some time since, Moung En visited Pegu and a number of the villages in the district, preaching and distributing tracts. He related that many listened and some disputed. An inquirer from Pantenau, three or four days' distance, called on me. He has read the 'View of the Christian Religion' and the 'Golden Balance,' and gives some evidence of a saving change."

"In Rangoon," says Mr. Jones, "the native teacher who goes about the city from day to day, stated that the number of those who believe in the Eternal God and secretly pray to him, is not small. Through fear of their rulers, they are not yet prepared openly to avow their attachment to the truth. They make no offerings to the priests, nor prostrate themselves at the pagodas; which nevertheless, they occasionally visit, to avoid the reproach of their acquaintances."

Even the Viceroy, for a time, seemed no way opposed to the operations of the brethren. Two of them called on him, and were received with distinguished kindness. They presented the Catechism of Geography and Astronomy, the Chronological Table, and a map of the world prepared in Burman, which he examined with lively interest, and asked many questions. "The remarks which he made concerning different places and the Christian Religion," says Mr. Wade, "evinced the knowledge he had obtained of these subjects, and proved that he had read much in the books which have been circulated among the people." The missionaries, however, do not place an undue estimate on this branch of labor, nor propose for a moment to make a substitute of it, for preaching the gospel. The number of the church up to the latest date (1833) is forty-two.

MAULMEIN.

When the town of Amherst was abandoned, the British soldiers and a large number of natives removed to this place. Mr. and Mrs. Boardman, who sailed from America in July, 1825, established themselves here in the summer of 1827, and remained for a while alone. Several persons listened with attention, and a flourishing school was commenced for boys. The school for girls at Amherst had excited so much interest, that eleven of them—more than half—removed thence to Maulmein. Among the members of this school was Mee-Shway-ee, whose memoir has been published in this country, and deserves a place among the most precious of our monuments of juvenile piety.

As Maulmein is the station of the British soldiery, it has become also the most prominent point of the operations of the mission. It is marked in missionary history, as a heathen town, which has been blessed with a revival of religion. The female school has been particularly distinguished; and a number of the scholars have been baptized. The whole number of baptisms, from January, 1828, to March, 1830, was sixty-two. During the year 1831, one hundred and thirty-six persons were baptized at this station.

The revival at Maulmein was largely shared by the British soldiers. They presented so interesting a field of labor, that Mr. Kincaid, on his arrival in November, 1830, assumed the task of preaching to them, and afterwards became the pastor of the church in the army. It was thought expedient to make this band of believers a separate church from the native converts. Before the detachment left the place, the church numbered one hundred and thirteen members; eighty-nine of whom were added during the year 1831.

In the region around Maulmein are several villages of Karens—a people who will be more particularly noticed under the next head. In an excursion of six weeks among them early in 1832, Mr. Judson baptized twenty-five converts. During the year embraced in the Report of the Board for 1833, sixty-six were admitted by baptism—bringing up the number of the Karen church attached to this station to seventy-seven. Eight were also added to the native church at Maulmein. The total number of members in the three churches at this place, in 1833, was four hundred and six.

This is the seat of the printing-establishment, where Messrs. Bennett, Cutter and Hancock assiduously labor to prepare tracts and portions of scripture for distribution. This is also Mr. Judson's principal residence, where he is devoting himself to the completion of his translation of the Bible. It is hoped it will be finished in May, 1834. An account of the employment of the press will be given in a subsequent page, under the head PRINTING.

TAVOY—KARENS.

By recommendation of the Board, and the advice of the brethren at Maulmein, Mr. and Mrs. Boardman commenced a station at Tavoy, in April, 1828. They were accompanied by two native Christians, of whom one was a Karen, approved by the church, but not baptized, till his arrival at Tavoy.

Mr. B. had no sooner arrived, than information was brought him of the Karens, a race of people who reside at some distance from Tavoy. He was assured that they would embrace the Christian religion, and invited to visit them. Their language differs from the Burman. In some of their characteristics, they resemble the North American Indians.

The Karens have now become the chief attraction at Tavoy. When Mr. Boardman visited them, he found them an exceedingly honest and devout people. They had among them a sorcerer or priest who had in his possession a book, to which they all paid religious worship. It was left among them some years previous by an individual, who enjoined upon them several superstitious observances, and this among the rest. It had been for twelve years, the chief object of their curiosity to find out the contents of this book. On hearing of the arrival of Mr. B. at Tavoy, they supposed he must be the teacher, a belief in whose coming had been the chief article of their creed, and who, they expected, could explain the book. Too impatient to wait till the rains were over, and Mr. B. could go to them, they sent a deputation to him, a distance of three days' journey, with the sorcerer and his book at their head. After unwrapping it in Mr. B.'s presence, with great veneration, they presented it to him. It was an English prayer book. He immediately told them it was a good book—that they must worship not the book itself, but the God of whom it spoke. Through the Karen Christian, who accompanied him from Maulmein, he was able to converse much with them on religious things. They listened with great interest, and urged him to visit them, which he did as soon as was practicable.

This incident has led to the developement of the most encouraging, important, and laborious branch of the Burman mission. Several visits have been made among the Karens, which have been invariably marked by a happy issue, and an astonishing spirit of inquiry has been awakened among them.

A church was soon formed at Tavoy, consisting of ten members, of whom seven were Karens, and one the head man of a village.

When the station was assuming an air of the highest interest, the intense labors of Mr. and Mrs. B. had so impaired their health, that they were obliged to leave, for a while, and retire to Maulmein. But the Karen converts, in the mean while, were not inactive. "Their manner," says Mrs. Boardman, "has been such as to remind us forcibly of what we read respecting the Apostles and primitive Christians. The chief, MOUNG SO, and MOUNG KYAH, have taken such parts of the Scriptures as we could give them, and gone from house to house, and village to village, expounding the word, exhorting the people, and uniting with their exertions, frequent and fervent prayers." Such a course of means, steadily pursued, served to water the seed sown, and cause it to vegetate and spring up, and bear the harvest which Mr. B. on his return, was allowed to gather in.

It was not till December, 1830, after an absence of seven months, that he resumed his labors, and then under the pressure of great weakness. He took with him Ko-Ing, an ordained preacher, and Ko-Thah-byoo. No sooner had he reached Tavoy, than his faithful Karens gathered about him from the country, bringing with them many who gave evidence of true conversion to God, and wished for baptism. Successive days were spent in a scrupulous examination of the candidates, and in the course of six weeks the best satisfaction was obtained of twenty-three, who were admitted to the rite. While Mr. B. was filled with joy in beholding such trophies of redeeming love, intelligence was brought, that a far greater number in remote villages, which he had formerly visited, had obtained like precious faith, and were desirous to give the same proof of their attachment to Christ, but were unable to come to town. On receiving this information, together with an urgent request that he would without delay come to them, he consented, though he was at the time so exhausted by sickness as to be unable to ride or walk. A zayat was prepared for him at a distance of three days' journey, and everything was made ready for him to commence the undertaking. It was at this juncture, so interesting and important, that Mr. Mason arrived. Nothing could be more in time, if we consider all the circumstances which followed.—Nothing could be more refreshing to Mr. Boardman than the countenance of a brother, sinking as he was under accumulated weakness, and with so great a work just before him—a brother with whom he might intrust those sheep in the wilderness, for whom he had cherished so great solicitude, and from whom it was plain he must soon be taken.

Mr. Mason, on first seeing the emaciated form of Mr. Boardman, hesitated respecting his contemplated journey; but when he perceived the ardor of his soul, and how much his heart was set on accomplishing the work proposed, he forbore all objections, and resolved to accompany him. On the 31st of January, 1831, they started, Mrs. B. in company, and Mr. B. borne on a cot.

After three days, they reached the place, without any very sensible exhaustion. "During our stay, however," says Mr. Mason, "he so evidently lost strength, that Mrs. B. on one occasion advised him to return; to which he replied with more than common animation, 'The cause of God is of more importance than my health, and if I return now, our whole object will be defeated—I want to see the work of the Lord go on.' Wednesday morning, it was apparent," says Mr. Mason, "that death was near. He consented, provided the examination and baptism of the candidates could that day be completed, to return.

Accordingly, a little before sunset, he was carried out in his bed to the water side, where, lifting his languid head to gaze on the gratifying scene, I had the pleasure to baptize in his presence thirty-four individuals, who gave satisfactory evidence to all, that they had passed from death unto life." He was so much exhausted that he could scarcely breathe. But his soul was in perfect peace. When the baptism was over, he said 'I feel now that I am done, and am ready to depart, and can say from my heart, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.'

On the second day of his return, it was concluded, with his approbation, to take him in a boat down a stream which was near.

"At about 12 o'clock," says Mrs. B. "the boat was ready, and only a few steps from the house. The Karens carried out Mr. Boardman first—and as the shore was muddy, I was obliged to wait till they could put him into the boat. They then took me immediately to him; but O, what was the agony of my soul when I saw that the hand of death was on him. I spoke to him, but he made no answer, though I fancied that he tried to move his lips. Without a struggle or a sigh, he breathed out his happy spirit into the presence of his Redeemer, with the faithful Karens kneeling around him in prayer."

Mr. Mason returned to Tavoy, and took charge of the station. About forty individuals have since been added to the church—most of them Karens, and residing in nine or ten different villages. The whole number baptized at Tavoy, during the year 1831, was ninety-six.

Early in January, 1832, Mr. Mason set out again for the Karen country, and was absent about two months. Our limits will only allow us to report some of the closing events. After travelling over several very difficult passes in mountains, in pursuit of those who had not heard the gospel, and distributing many tracts, he returned to the well-known village of MOUNG-SO, late in February, when he writes,—“I cry no longer ‘the horrors of heathenism,’ but the ‘blessings of missions!’ I date no longer from a heathen land. Heathenism has fled these banks. I look on fields cultivated by Christians, and see no dwellings but those inhabited by Christian families. When brother Boardman visited this people, three years ago, they were worshipping demons, and in the practice of all the vices connected with universal darkness ; but he preached to them the gospel, ‘ with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven ;’ and behold, all things have become new !” Here, the converts from the adjacent country gathered around Mr. Mason, and a course of examination for baptism began, which terminated the third day with the admission of twenty-seven. Many of these dated their Christian experience ten or twelve months back, and some even more,—affording to their pious acquaintances and others, the best opportunity of determining the sincerity of their profession.

Mrs. Boardman, says, “ most of them live two or three days’ journey distant ; but, by their frequent visits to us, over almost impassable mountains, and through deserts, the haunt of the tiger, evince a love for the gospel seldom surpassed. What would the Christians in America think of travelling forty or fifty miles on foot, to hear a sermon and beg a Christian book ? A good Christian woman, who has been living with us several months, told me that when she came, the water was so deep that she was obliged to wait till the men in the company could cut down trees, and lay across the streams for her to get over on ; and sometimes she forded the streams. The reason of their coming at so bad a time was, we had appointed a church fast, and sent to the Karen Christians living near, to unite with us ; but a rumor of it spread beyond the mountains, and they were so afraid that they should not observe it at the right time and in the right way, that a large company of the best disciples came immediately to inquire about it. As far as we can learn, they manifest the same tenderness of conscience and fear of doing wrong, on every subject ; and I can say with truth, that the more we become acquainted with them, the more reason we find to love them as Christians, and to believe that the work is of God. Some of them have lived on our premises month after month, and their conduct has been most exemplary; and we have not heard of an instance of immorality among any of the church members during the past year."

The Karen disciples manifest a truly missionary spirit. They had heard by report, that some of their kinsmen according to the flesh, dwelt in Siam, who had never heard the name of Jesus. They knew nothing of the purpose of our missionaries to form a station in Siam, nor of Mr. Mason's wish to visit the Siamese Karens. But when he began to make inquiries preparatory to such a tour, he found he was anticipated. Several had already gone to proclaim to them the glad tidings of the gospel.

The spirit of inquiry among the Karens around Tavoy seems not at all diminished. On the contrary, deputations and appeals are often sent from a long distance in the interior, entreating the missionaries to send one of their number to make known to them the way of life.

MERGUI.

In October, 1831, Mr. and Mrs. Wade, by the advice of the brethren, made a visit to Mergui, and tarried little more than five months. On arriving, Mr. W. found the inhabitants were numerous, and made up of Burmans, Chinese, Portuguese, Mussulmans, &c. He was received by Mr. Maingy, the civil commissioner, with kindness, and a place of residence was assigned him; but on commencing his labors, he found few at first who were disposed to hear his message, or receive his books. He took a zayat, which he occupied a part of each day, and received those who called for conversation. He had the satisfaction to perceive an increasing attention on the part of the people, from week to week, and a growing desire for books, till, on some occasions, he gave away from thirty to one hundred and fifty a day. A spirit of inquiry was also awakened, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of several individuals. Early in his visit, he was found by certain Karens from the neighboring jungle, and earnestly solicited to go to them; and having obtained the assistance of Ko-Ing, a native preacher from Tavoy, and Ko-Manpoke, from Maulmein, he readily consented. He was received by them with all readiness, as other brethren have been in other villages of that interesting people. During his stay of two weeks, multitudes of them heard the gospel, and lasting impressions appeared to be produced on the minds of the principal chief and of some of his adherents. Before leaving Mergui in March, Mr. Wade deemed it his duty to regard the request of several applicants for baptism; and, on mature examination, five were admitted. After the administration of the sacred ordinance, the new converts, and such other native disciples as determined to remain, were embodied as a church of Christ, and Ko-Ing appointed to be their pastor.

The efforts of Mrs. Wade during the time, in school teaching, will be reported most satisfactorily in her own language. She says, "When we went to Mergui, not expecting to remain in the place many months, it was not thought expedient to incur the expense of building a school-house; but I found twelve or fourteen girls and women, who were willing to learn to read, with the assistance of a father or brother at home, and come to me for recitation and religious instruction nearly every day. Two of this number learned to read, and committed the catechism and short prayers; another had just begun to read; four others, who had before learned, made good proficiency in committing select portions of Scripture, prayers, &c., (three of this number were from sister Boardman's school at Tavoy,) and three others had nearly finished the elementary lessons. These ten promise to continue their studies, though we are removed from them. This is all I was able to do in the way of schools, during our stay at Mergui. We are encouraged, however, in reflecting that the last great day may show that even this feeble effort was not entirely in vain; for the first woman, soon after beginning to learn, appeared serious, attended family worship and daily instructions, and was the first baptized. Two other individuals also gave some evidence of piety, and earnestly requested baptism. But, for the present, it was thought best to defer it.

SCHOOLS.

Feeling the importance of implanting the principles of religion in the minds of children, schools have been regarded by the Board from the beginning as among the most important objects. But the number of laborers in Burmah is so few, and their cares so pressing, that other occupations more strictly connected with preaching the gospel, have attracted their attention. Schools, however, have not been neglected, nor have they been useless. Their establishment was a favorite object with Mrs. Judson; and, except at Rangoon, no station has been formed where there was not a school in connexion.

At Ava, Dr. Price instructed the young princes. At Amherst, before the station was relinquished, a female school had already begun to diffuse light and holiness. And it was in Mrs. Wade's female school at Maulmein, that the first openings were visible of that revival, which resulted in the addition of many redeemed sinners to the church of God.

Although the early circumstances of the mission prevented the establishment of a school at Rangoon, at the beginning, yet an attempt has been made. In August, 1831, Mr. Jones took preparatory measures for the instruction of children born in the country, whether wholly or partially of Burman descent. Religion was regarded as a prime object in the system of instruction, and much interest was taken both by the missionaries and the parents of the children, in the two schools of Mr. and Mrs. Jones. On their departure for Siam, the schools fell into the hands of Mr. Kincaid; and we grieve to say, that a letter, dated July 27, 1832, brings information that they had been broken up by the command of the viceroy. Knowledge, however, is the possession of the mind; and when it is once implanted, man cannot take it away. The acquisitions of these few months, carried into all the walks of life and distributed through the country, we trust, will prove to be the good seed of the kingdom, springing up hereafter, and bearing fruit, an hundred fold.

The schools for children at Maulmein, taught chiefly by the missionaries' wives, are increasingly interesting as means of doing good: The Karen school established above Maulmein, on the river, is taught by Moug-Doot, and as he and his wife are both pious, they may be expected to exert the best influence, not only on the children, but on the parents.

There is a school for adults at Maulmein, containing twenty pupils, under the instruction of Moug Tsanloon. In a late excursion among the Karens contiguous to that place, Mr. Judson selected three interesting young men to enter the school, designing to qualify them to read and interpret the Scriptures to their countrymen. Through their influence, the light of knowledge will be carried into the Karen wilds, and the Christians, it is hoped, will thus be enabled to advance the more rapidly in holy attainments.

The schools at Tavoy are more interesting and successful. In a letter from Mrs. Boardman, dated in January, 1832, she says: "On our removal to Maulmein in 1830, our day schools in Tavoy were entirely broken up; and it was not till last April, that I found myself sufficiently at leisure to attempt anything in that way again. I then opened a school with five scholars, under the care of a respectable and intelligent Tavoy female. We met with much encouragement, so that other schools have been since established, and our number of day scholars is now about eighty; which, with the boarding-schools, two village-schools, and about fifty persons who learn during the rainy season, in the Karen jungle, make upwards of one hundred and seventy under our instruction. The scholars in the jungle, of course, cannot come to us often; but a great many have been in to be examined in their lessons, and we are surprised and delighted at the progress they have made.

"The children of the day schools in town, and some of the teachers, attend worship on Lord's day. About forty can repeat Mrs. Judson's catechism, and some have added to that the account of the 'creation,' the 'prodigal son,' the 'rich man and Lazarus,' and part of the 'sermon on the mount.' The little girls, about forty in number have many of them made good progress in needle-work. But what gives me far greater pleasure, is the interest with which they listen to religious instruction, and the affectionate, docile disposition they manifest. They are very much ridiculed for studying the Christian books; but they bear it patiently. One little boy, eleven years old, in the boarding-school, has committed to memory 800 verses of Scripture, besides a short compendium of astronomy, geography, and chronology.

“One of the female schools, containing eleven scholars, is extremely interesting. Five of the scholars are members of the church; two have asked for baptism, and one of the remaining four is a very hopeful inquirer. They attend worship in Burman every morning and evening, and the female prayer meeting Wednesday forenoon.” The same letter says, “I have no doubt that village-schools could be established with ease throughout the province, if some person acquainted with the language and manners and character of the Tavoyans, could devote all his time to the object. We have had two applications from villages a few miles distant, and have established one school with twelve scholars. More than ten children in another village are waiting, ready to enter as soon as the school-house is finished. We have now seven schools in operation, besides the two on our premises, and those in the Karen jungle. The Karens throughout the province, believers and unbelievers, are exceedingly anxious to have their children taught to read.”

VILLAGE PREACHING.

This has been pursued with very encouraging success. The evidence which it gives of the spirit of inquiry throughout the country, and the zeal of the people to hear of the religion of Christ, is most gratifying to the minds of the missionaries. The first excursion of this kind was made by Mr. Boardman around Tavoy. Similar ones have since been made by Mr. Mason, and by Mr. Judson around Maulmein and between Rangoon and Prome. They go with two or three converts to aid them in the work, and provide themselves with large quantities of tracts. At every village where the people will listen, they stop and preach; give tracts to those who will receive them—in some instances at every house—and, if circumstances seem to require it, they prolong their stay, or leave one of the native converts for a while, to instruct them more fully. In some cases, the whole village has come to hear, and many have been brought to the knowledge of the truth. The following, from Mr. Mason's journal, is a specimen of the encouragement met with during these tours. "Before sunrise this morning I received a visit from the chief of a neighboring village, who introduced himself with a present, and said, he came to request books for his village, and to show me the way there.

While putting up tracts, he was careful to observe, 'There are many houses in my village.' He went round with me to every house, and exhorted the people to examine the books, and consider the doctrines therein taught.

Besides the tracts thus distributed, many from distant regions receive them at the missionary stations, and carry them to every part of the country. Some interesting cases of conversion have occurred, of persons whose attention was first excited by tracts, found far in the interior. The following case, which came to the knowledge of Mr. Judson, deserves notice. "A man and wife near the head of the Pa-tah river, though not baptized, and never seen by any foreign missionary, both died in the faith; the man enjoining it on his surviving friends to have the 'View of the Christian Religion,' laid on his breast and buried with him."

In the first part of the year 1832, Mr. Judson made two excursions among the Karen villages, and his visits were every where sought with interest. On the 11th of March, 1832, while passing up the river, he fell in company with a boat full of men; and when he inquired whether they wished to hear the gospel of Christ, an elderly man, the chief of the party, replied, that he had already heard much of the gospel, and there was nothing he desired so much as an interview with the teacher. "We accordingly went to the shore," says Mr. Judson, "and spent several hours very delightfully under the shade of the overhanging trees, and the banner of the love of Jesus. The old man's experience was so clear, and his desire for baptism so strong, that though circumstances prevented our gaining so much testimony of his conduct since believing, as we usually required, we felt that it would be wrong to refuse his request. After the ordinance, he went on his way rejoicing aloud, and declaring his resolution to make known the eternal God, and the dying love of Jesus, on all the banks of the Yoon-zalen, his native stream." "The dying words of an aged man of God," continues Mr. Judson, "when he waived his withered, death-struck arm and exclaimed 'the best of all is, God is with us'—I feel in my very soul.—Yes, the Great Invisible is in these Karen wilds. That mighty Being, who heaped up these rocks, and reared these stupendous mountains, and poured out these streams in all directions, and scattered immortal beings throughout these deserts,—he is present by the influence of his Holy Spirit, and accompanies the sound of the gospel with converting, sanctifying power."

PRINTING.

On the arrival at Calcutta of Mr. Hough, who was a printer as well as minister, the Serampore brethren presented our mission with a press and types. This department of labor, however, began to assume a more vigorous and encouraging character, on the accession to the mission of Mr. Bennett, in 1830. He has been incessantly occupied in printing tracts and portions of the Scriptures, till the present time. Messrs. Cutter and Hancock have since been added to this department, and four presses are now at work. The translation of the New Testament is completed, and the whole of it is now in circulation. Twenty other works have also been prepared by the brethren—all but one of which—the Burman Grammar—are designed for circulation in the country. Since the arrival of Mr. Bennett, it is estimated that he has published at least 250,000 tracts, which can be issued at the rate of eight octavo pages for a cent. In addition to the tracts, a letter from Mr. Bennett, dated December 19th, 1832, says, I am happy to say that the New Testament is now out of press. It makes a volume of 624 octavo pages, and has been printed in eight months and twenty-eight days from the commencement of the composition to the close of the presswork. Three thousand copies have been printed—so that the number of pages is 1,872,000!!—The whole number of pages printed since my return from Bengal on the 15th of March last, is 2,388,000. The number of Tracts 30,000—and a Spelling Book of thirty-six pages in the Karen language, 3,000 copies. The characters for the latter are like the Burman except six or eight, and we make the Burman fonts answer for both as far as they will. I am now engaged in book-binding, as the Testament is out, and we wish as soon as possible to furnish the native Christians with a copy. There is no room here to be idle.

REMARKS.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones left the Burman mission to establish a new station at Siam, at the close of September, 1832. Mr. and Mrs. Wade returned to America, in consequence of the state of his health, and arrived in May, 1833. They were accompanied by two native converts, a Burman and Karen. After a year's residence in this country, they are hoping, with fresh vigor and a large reinforcement of missionaries, to return to the scene of their toils.

The whole number of American missionaries now in Burmah is eighteen.

There are also in the service of the mission two native preachers, and several native assistants, who serve as school-teachers, tract-distributors, &c.

The amount of success which God has given to the mission, has been steadily increasing.

FUTURE EFFORTS.

The increasing amount of missionary exertion will increase the amount of expense. The addition of laborers to the different fields, has drawn largely on the treasury; and their future support will, of course, require an augmentation of liberality on the part of the churches. An appeal for that augmentation, we trust, will not be in vain. For we rejoice to believe that the Christian community are ready to bestow of their abundance, to promote the cause of the Redeemer.

While we look with pleasure on the evidence that we have not labored in vain, manifested in the preceding pages, let us remember how much remains to be done. Supposing a generation of men to continue thirty years, since our mission commenced in Burmah, two-thirds of her eight millions (the lowest estimate) have gone to the awards of eternity. And how few of them have heard the name of Jesus! A few—a precious few—have joined the hosts of the redeemed. But where are the remainder?

DUTY OF THE BAPTIST DENOMINATION.

In view of these facts, two things are required of us. 1. A spirit of self-denial. This must exhibit itself in a willingness to contribute, to the extent of our means, for the sustentation of the cause. Let us not give the trifles which we shall not feel; but let us offer to the Lord an oblation worthy of our gratitude as Christians, and worthy of our professions as pitying the souls of men.

There are some, too, among our churches, who must offer themselves to God. A band of four thousand missionaries would be far more worthy of our churches, than the little company of four thousand who now bear the heat and burden of the day. Let ministers seek out in their churches, and encourage suitable missionaries. Let not parents and friends kill their ardent feelings, and quench their missionary spirit. Send them, if they will go. Resign them to the work to which their heavenly Father has called them, and in which you feel so high an interest. And let the young men break away from the endearments of home and native soil; resist the obstructions in their way, and enter on the apostolic work of saving souls.

2. The church must cultivate a spirit of prayer. This, and the spirit of missions, have a reciprocal influence. Pray much for the heathen, and a missionary spirit wakes up, of course. We cannot look for the conversion of the world, till there is more of ser-vent piety, more of deep, absorbing devotion, more love of communion with heaven among us. We must return to primitive piety, and then we shall have primitive success. Prayer must become the very atmosphere breathed by the church; and holiness must be stamped upon the lines of every countenance.—“ Arise, O Lord, into thy rest, thou, and the ark of thy strength.”

MISSIONARIES.

The following table contains the names of all the missionaries sent to the Burman Empire by the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, with the date of their arrival there, &c.

Missionaries.	Arrival.	Remarks.
Adoniram Judson	July, 1813	At Maulmain.
Mrs. Ann H. Judson	“ “	Died at Amherst, Oct. 24, 1826.
George H. Hough, printer	Oct. 1816	Left the mission in 1826. Since resident at Calcutta and Maulmain.
Mrs. Hough	“ “	“ “ “ “ “ “
Edw. W. Wheelock	Sept. 1818	Drowned on his passage from Rangoon to Calcutta, Aug. 1819.
Mrs. Wheelock	“ “	Married to Mr. Jones of Calcutta; died 1831.
James Colman	“ “	Died at Cox's Bazaar, Chittagong, July 4, 1822.
Mrs. Colman	“ “	Married to Amos Sutton, Eng. Bap. Miss. Orissa.
Jona. D. Price, M.D	Dec. 1821	Died at Ava, Feb. 14, 1828.
Mrs. Price	“ “	Died at Rangoon, 1822.
Jonathan Wade	Dec. 1823	At Tavoy.
Mrs. D. B. L. Wade	“ “	“ “
Geo. D. Boardman	April 1827	Died near Tavoy, Feb. 1831.
Mrs. S. B. H. Boardman	“ “	Married to A. Judson at Tavoy, April, 1834.
Cephas Bennett	Jan. 1830	(At Tavoy.) On a visit to this country, 1840-1.
Mrs. S. K. Bennett	“ “	“ “ “ “ “ “
Eugenio Kincaid	Nov. “	(At Ava.) Temporarily at Akyab, Arracan.
Mrs. A. Kincaid	“ “	Died at Maulmain, Dec. 19, 1831.
Mrs. B. Kincaid	Nov. 1832	Married to E. Kincaid in 1832.
Francis Mason	“ 1830	At Tavoy.
Mrs. H. M. Mason	“ “	“ “
John Taylor Jones	Feb. 1831	Removed to Bangkok, Siam, in 1833
Mrs. E. G. Jones	“ “	Died at Bangkok, March 23, 1838.

Oliver T. Cutter, printer	Feb. 1832	Removed to Asam in 1836.
Mrs. H. B. Cutter	" "	" " "
Thomas Simons	Jan. 1833	At Maulmain.
Royal B. Hancock, printer	" "	At Tavoy.
Mrs. A. B. Hancock	" "	" "
Miss S. Cummings	" "	Died at Maulmain, Aug. 1834.
Miss C. J. Harrington	June 1833	Married to T. Simons.
Nathan Brown	" "	Removed to Asam in 1836.
Mrs. E. W. Brown	" "	" " "
Abner Webb	" "	Returned to America, March, 1833.
Mrs. C. S. Webb	" "	" " " "
Justus H. Vinton	Dec. 1834	At Maulmain.
Mrs. C. H. Vinton	" "	" "
Hosea Howard	" "	" "
Mrs. T. P. Howard	" "	" "
Sewall M. Osgood, printer	" "	" "
Mrs. E. B. Osgood	" "	Died, Oct. 5, 1837, at Maulmain.
Miss A. P. Gardner	" "	Married at Tavoy to E. L. Abbott, April, 1837.
Lovell Ingalls	Feb. 1836	At Mergui.
Mrs. M. D. Ingalls	" "	" "
James M. Haswell	" "	At Amherst.
Mrs. J. M. Haswell	" "	" "
Elisha L. Abbott	" "	(At Rangoon.) Temporarily at Sandoway, Arracan.
Miss E. Macomber	" "	Died at Maulmain, April 16, 1840.
Edw. A. Stevens	Feb. 1838	At Maulmain.
Mrs. E. L. H. Stevens	" "	" "
Lyman Stilson	" "	} Removed to Ramree, Arracan, in Feb. 1839.
Mrs. L. B. Stilson	" "
Darlin L. Brayton	" "	At Mergui.
Mrs. H. F. Brayton	" "	" "

RECAPITULATION.

The American Baptist Mission in Burmah, commenced in the year 1813. At the date of the Annual Report of the Board, April 29th, 1840, there were eight missions in Asia: Tavoy mission; Rangoon; Ava, Arracan; Siam and China; Asam, and Teloogoos. These comprised 15 stations, and 21 out-stations; 22 preachers, 2 preachers and teachers, 3 preachers and printers, 2 printers, and 31 female assistants; making in all 60 missionaries and assistants. There were 66 native assistants, and 29 churches. 170 had been baptized during the preceding year, and the number of members was 1450. The amount of printing executed during the year was, at the Maulmain press, 8,124,000 octavo pages; at Tavoy, 1,642,666 pages; at Bangkok, 1,500,000 pages. The printing executed at the Maulmain press from the commencement, amounted to 55,050,200 pages.

The whole Bible has been faithfully translated by Mr. Judson; and a large number have been distributed, either entire, or in extracts printed separately. Tracts have been widely and successfully circulated, and the light of Divine truth, has thus been brought in contact with the benighted minds of millions of heathen.

Schools have been sustained, and very many children instructed, not only to read, but to understand the truth, and many have been made savingly acquainted with that truth, by which alone they can be freed from the yoke of ignorance, superstition and sin.

But much is yet to be done. Millions are perishing for lack of vision. The labourers need to be increased, and the labour greatly enlarged before a tithe of the immense population of Asia can hear of Jesus, or learn the way of life. To send these labourers, and to sustain this labour, American Baptists are called upon to be active, and liberal, and prayerful, denying themselves if it be necessary for the accomplishment of so glorious a work; remembering the self-denial of Him who though He was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty, might become rich.

A PLAIN DIALOGUE

BETWEEN

TWO BRETHREN, A. & B.

OF

THE BAPTIST DENOMINATION.

BY A FRIEND TO ZION IN GEORGIA.

Brother A. Good morning, brother B. I am truly glad to see you at my house so early this morning. I hope you have something pleasing and profitable to relate to me and my family concerning religion?

Brother B. Nothing very particular; but my mind has been running a great deal, of late, upon this Missionary and Anti-missionary business; and, as you know, I am what people call an Anti-missionary man—and, as I know, you are what people call a Missionary man, I thought I would just walk over, and have a serious, Christian, and brotherly chat with you on the subject.

A. With all my heart, my dear brother. But, I hope our conversation on this interesting and important subject, is to be not only serious, Christian, and brotherly; but, also, cool and dispassionate—candid and plain, as between brethren. And, indeed, I hope we shall enter upon this subject with hearts lifted up to Almighty God in prayer; that our conversation may be to the edification of ourselves, the benefit of others, and the honor and glory of God.

B. I agree to all this; and hope, and trust, it may be as you say—for my own part, I wish to know what is right.

A. My brother, if we must enter on this subject, the first thing, (if we would go correctly to work,) is to settle the meaning of the word Missionary; about which there is so much ado. I would, therefore, ask you, my brother,—what is the meaning of this word ?

B. Why, I have always understood the word Missionary to mean a money-hunter, or a person going about the country preaching, or rather pretending to preach the Gospel, when, in reality, he is only hunting money ; and begging people out of their hard earnings, as he says, for religious purposes, when, indeed, it is only to be put into his own pocket ; thus cheating the people, and carrying on a great imposition and speculation.

A. If this be the idea you have attached to that word, it is no wonder you have been so opposed to Missionaries. If I understood the word as you do, I should be as strenuous in my opinion as you are, or perhaps more so. But I would further ask,—How do you define the word Apostle.

B. Why, Apostle, I always thought, meant one of the preachers in the days of Jesus, while he was here on earth, such as Peter and Paul, and others.

A. Peter and Paul were certainly Apostles, though Paul was not called to preach the Gospel, till some time after our Saviour had, in person, left this world. But permit me to observe, my brother, you have given no definition of the word Apostle, as to its literal or proper signification.

B. Will you be so kind as to let me hear your definition of Apostle and Missionary too ? for I should be glad to know the proper meaning of them both.

A. I will with pleasure. And here, before I proceed, suffer me to say, I am truly sorry that you do not know the origin of these words ; that is, you do not know the languages from which they are derived ; for if you did, we should have no difficulty on the subject. And further, if you were acquainted with the proper meaning of these words, and knew from whence they are derived, &c. &c., I am persuaded that all those prejudices which now possess your bosom, would be done away.

The fact is, both these words signify the very same thing. They both come from words, or verbs, which signify to send, or to send forth ; and when used as names, they signify persons sent, or sent forth. The only difference between the words is that of sound; one following the sound of the Greek—the other the Latin. The word Apostle comes from the Greek verb Apostello. The word Missionary, from the Latin verb Mitto; but these both signify, in English, to send, or to send forth. Therefore, the word Missionary, in its literal sense, signifies any one sent, or sent forth, on any business or matter whatever; but when the word Missionary is used in a religious sense, it signifies a minister of the Gospel, or one sent of God, to preach the Gospel:—consequently, every minister of the Gospel, who is indeed sent of God, is a Missionary, whether he knows it or not, or whether he believes it or not; of course, every word which our opposing brethren say against Missionaries, is just so much said against themselves, if indeed they are sent of God to preach the Gospel! Now, my brother, is it not a pity that people, yea, ministers of the Gospel too, should calumniate, vilify and abuse themselves, and yet not know it!! Oh! my dear brother, well might we adopt the language of the prayer of the dying Jesus in this case, and say,—“Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.”

B. Well! but brother A. you cannot show me the word Missionary in the New Testament, nor in the word of God?

A. I knew that as well as you. But, my brother, reflect for one moment, and you will certainly find that this mode of argument is too frivolous for any man of sense. And, more especially, I wish you to remember, that if it proves anything it proves too much. But as I am aware that this is considered a strong argument by you and your party, I shall therefore take some pains in showing you, that it is no argument at all, or, as already said, if it will prove anything, it will prove too much. I ask you, my brother,—Do you find the word “immersion” in the New Testament? Or do you find the expression, “imputed righteousness of Christ” in the word of God? You certainly do not. Now remember that this is the very same argument of which those make use who practise sprinkling; and also of those who deny the doctrine of the imputed righteousness of Christ. They cry out, "You can't show us immersion in the New Testament," nor "the expression imputed righteousness of Christ, in the word of God." And they think, or seem to think, they have completely stopped the mouths of those who hold to both. Now what are you to do? You must see that according to your own arguments, and in order to be consistent with yourself, you must drop the practice of immersion, and give up the doctrine of imputed righteousness. You must further see, that inasmuch as you bring forward the same argument against the Missionaries, which those other persons bring against the Baptists; therefore, I say, you must see that if your argument is good, so is theirs; and if theirs is not good, neither is yours. There is no way of getting round or over this.

B. But then, we have men enough among the Baptists who know the Greek language, in which, as I have been told, the New Testament was originally written and they all say, the word baptize signifies to immerse; and I believe them. Indeed, I have heard you explain the thing to my entire satisfaction.

A. True, my brother, the Greek word, rendered baptize in our present version, signifies to immerse, dip, plunge, &c.; and so the Greek word, rendered Apostle in our version, signifies Missionary, or one sent. The truth is, neither of the words was ever translated into English, properly speaking, but only altered a little in their termination, while the original Greek words were retained. If you do not feel free to believe me, go and ask others who know the original, and are not warped by sectarian prejudice,—go and consult the translation of Doddridge, Macknight, and G. Campbell, and you will find what I say to be correct. And now, my brother, I hope you will learn, and remember for the future, that to speak lightly of the word Missionary is the same as to speak lightly of the word Apostle. I do humbly trust that you will never deride, nor yet be frightened at this word any more, or speak hard things of those who bear the name. You said you believed those who were acquainted with the Greek,

&c. when they told you thus and so concerning the word baptize—why then will you not believe them, when they tell you the proper meaning of the words Missionary and Apostle?

B. But do you not believe there is a speculation going on in this Missionary business?

A. I candidly do not. Nor do I believe it is in the power of you, or any one of our Anti-Missionary brethren, to prove one solitary charge, of the many which are brought forward of this nature. I know there is a mighty outcry about speculation; but is it not strange, passing strange, that those who never gave one cent, nor ever intend to give towards the spread of the Gospel, or the glorious Missionary effort that is now making, as the means in the hands of God to evangelize the world, should be the very persons to find fault about the money expended in this business! And is it not equally strange, that those who know nothing at all of what is doing, should be able to discover fraud, speculation, &c., while those who know the whole movement, and where every cent of the money goes, how expended, &c., should know nothing of this! And, surely, if any persons ought to complain about the improper expenditure of money, it should be those who give their money, and not those who do not give, or ever intend to give! But, my brother, what is still more strange than all the rest, if possible, is, that all those Christians, and especially ministers of the Gospel, not only among Baptists, but also, of other Christian denominations, who have always been the most signalized for disinterested Christian benevolence, honesty, zeal, and unwearied exertion and perseverance in the cause of humanity, of religion, of Christ, and of God—and whose moral and religious characters stand fair and unimpeachable—strange! that all the while, these men are nothing but a band of swindlers, pick-pockets, and cheats!!! Be assured, my brother, there is a particular account taken of the time when, the place where, and the manner how this money is expended; and this you would know, if you knew anything at all about it. Indeed, what supprises me, is, that so much should be done at so small an expense. You can now obtain the blessed word of God for a mere trifle, compared with the usual price of paper, printing, binding, &c. before Bible and other benevolent societies sprang into being. The fact is, the day is coming, when it will be known who loved and hugged up their money, and who did not—when it will be known, who loved their money better than precious immortal souls, and who did not!

B. I have been looking over the word of God again and again, and I can find no—“Thus saith the Lord,”—no authority, either in precept or example, for all this Missionary business.

A. This appears very strange, indeed. If I mistake not, the Missionary business, as you call it, is to do all the good we can, as instruments in the hands of God, in administering to the spiritual wants of our fellow-creatures—in preaching a crucified Saviour to a dying world. The Gospel is glad tidings of great joy, peace on earth, and good will towards all men—The Missionary spirit is to declare these glad tidings to all men.—The Missionary business is to visit every city, hamlet, and cottage—yea, every part of the whole world, and every spot where human beings live, and tell them of a Saviour—tell them Jesus died to save lost sinners. The ascending Jesus says, “Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature!” Surely this is precept—is it not? Well, the Missionary spirit is to carry this command—this positive, great, and heart-cheering command into effect. The Saviour says, “Ye are the salt of the earth.” Now, my brother, I pray you to reflect upon the import of this solemn passage of Scripture. What is salt? and what its use? Is it not to save from putrefaction and loss, those bodies and substances which are predisposed to putrefaction, and which would putrefy and rot, and consequently be lost, were it not for the application, yea, the speedy application of this salt? Again, salt is not only to save from putridity, but to render sweet and palatable to the taste, and proper for the master’s use. Now, if Christians are to the world, not a part of the world, but the whole of it, what salt is to a piece of flesh and other substances subject to putrefy, O! then, what a loud and irresistible call for speedy, powerful, and unwearied exertion! Here is a great body, a mighty mass, even eight hundred millions of human beings, carrying within them by nature the properties of putridity and the seeds of death! Six hundred millions of these precious immortal souls are not even nominally Christians, and have not so much as heard of Jesus! Now, my brother, the missionary spirit is to apply this little remaining salt, as far as possible, to the whole of this vast body of putridity and death. It is to go and tell those perishing millions that there is a Saviour. Thirty years is the length of time allowed for a generation to pass away. Then, my brother, I ask—Where, O! where is the Christian heart that can reflect unmoved, that in thirty years, six hundred millions of human beings must die, without having heard of Jesus—must stumble over the high mountains of darkness, and be lost for ever! Surely no Christian can know this, without feeling a strong desire to extend the helping hand, and exert himself, as God's instrument, in sending the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe, to these perishing sons and daughters of Adam.

Again, our Saviour says, "Ye are the light of the world"—not a part of the world. The missionary spirit is to let this light shine into every part of the whole world, driving away moral darkness, and imparting moral light. "Go," says our blessed master, "and teach all nations," &c. The missionary spirit is to obey. God, by the mouth of Paul, says, "How shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard," &c. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" therefore, the missionary spirit says, they shall hear—they shall have the word of God.—Hence it is that you see Bible Societies established, and Missionaries going forth.

It would be in vain, my dear brother, to attempt to point out the many positive Gospel precepts which call upon every Christian for the most unwearied exertions of a missionary nature; we shall, therefore, take a glance at the examples.

We find after our Saviour had commanded his Apostles to go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature, it is said, in the 20th verse, "And they went forth and preached every where," &c. This is precisely what the missionary spirit aims at, in this day and time. It is said, in the same verse, that the Lord worked with them. So he does at present; he works with his missionary servants, as the instruments in his hands. If this is not example, then, my brother, I am at an utter loss to know what you mean by example.

If you wish any further example, take the whole Apostolic dispensation; see how laborious, persevering, and indefatigable were all the Apostles, in visiting every nation, and kindred, and tribe of people; but especially Paul, the great Apostle or Missionary to the Gentile or Heathen world. And if you will turn your attention to the 4th chapter of Phil. 15 and 16 verses, you will find proof that the brethren supported Paul while thus engaged in preaching to the heathen, just as the missionary brethren do in this day and time. See also 2 Cor. xi. 7, 8, 9, and xii. 13, &c. &c.

I would therefore say, that the Gospel breathes the very spirit of benevolence and religious missionary effort, and that the missionary spirit is the very spirit of the Gospel. Yea, I would say, the missionary effort now making, is the very hand of the Gospel, (so to speak) which the Lord of hosts is putting forward, by which to evangelize the world, and gather in the fields, which are already white to the harvest.—And that nearly the whole of the New Testament, both in precept and example, is a "Thus saith the Lord," for the missionary exertions that are now making.

B. But if God wishes the heathen to be converted, can he not convert them without your help, and all this ado?

A. True, God is able to carry his purposes into effect, without the agency of man at all, if he sees proper. But, you must remember, this observation is just as true about all things else, whether at home or abroad, whether temporal or spiritual, as it is about the conversion of the heathen. If God wishes it done he can do it. Why then, my brother, do you give yourself all this trouble about your crop, when the truth is, if God wills you to have a plentiful crop, he can give it to you without your labor and all this ado? Or why trouble yourself about any blessing whatever, for if God wills you to have it, he can give it to you without your agency? God is able to fill your barns with grain and your coffers with gold, without your labor; so give yourself no trouble; throw by all your implements of husbandry, and lie down and fold your hands, and say, "A little more sleep," &c. Again—If God wills the people to be converted in our own county, he can convert them, or in our own state, or country, or family—our wives, or sons, or daughters, or servants. If God wills any, or all these to be converted, he can do it without our work; so, then, away with all preaching, and praying, and exhorting, and reading—send home your ministers and burn your meeting-houses, for the truth is, God can convert the people, and save their souls without all these. Ah! my brother, you must see that your principle is rotten, and when reduced to practice, it will not do.

The truth is, this principle goes not only to paralyze, but completely to destroy all human agency whatever, relative to all things, both in the physical and moral world. Again, what God can do, is no part of our business; our duty and business is to obey. Suppose there is a kind master with a great many servants; and he tells one of them to go to a distant part of his plantation, and give food to some persons there, who are likely to perish; but this servant, instead of obeying, says to his master, "Sir, if you wish those persons to be fed, you are able to feed them without my help; I shall not go one step." What would you think of such a servant? Would you not say he was an insolent and disobedient servant? But what is still worse, suppose that this disobedient servant not only refuses to obey his master's orders himself, but does all in his power to hinder others from obeying, and continually whispers in their ears, your master is able to feed those people, if he wishes to have them fed, without your help; and when he finds they are determined to obey their master, and do their duty, he actually insults and abuses them for this act of obedience, and declares he will no longer keep company with them, or any one else that will obey their master, in affording relief to those persons who are starving for bread. What do you say of this servant now? O! you will say, his conduct is exceedingly improper. Very well, I leave you to make the application. There is one idea more embraced in this principle of yours, which I desire you to notice; and that is, it goes to impeach God with folly, for having called into requisition, or pressed into his service the weak agency of man, (which he has done from his first formation to the present time,) when, according to this principle of yours, there was no necessity for it, or propriety in so doing! Brother B., reflect and tremble.

B. What! Do you say God has called into requisition the agency of man from his first existence?

A. Certainly. When God created man, he put him into the garden to dress it. And surely if God willed the garden to be dressed, he was able to dress it, without the help of Adam. And I have sometimes thought this was to show that man was to be the dresser of God's spiritual garden, so long as he had a church upon earth. But let us return to the subject.

B. Yes, I wish to return; for you really have made my argument about God's ability look bad enough. But I still feel that the conversion of the soul is God's work; and we ought to be careful, lest we be found taking his works into our hands.—Remember Uzzah.

A. True, my brother, the conversion of the soul is God's work, and his only; and a man can no more convert his own soul, or that of another, independent of God, than he can create a world. But it is equally true, that he can no more make one grain of corn, or seed of cotton, independent of God, than he can convert a soul, or create a world.—Nay, my brother, all the men in the universe combined, can no more make one blade of corn grow, independent of God and his blessing, than they can pull down the strong pillars of heaven. Is it not in God that we live, move, and have our being? But, because it is God's work, and by his blessing that our corn grows, and of his unmerited goodness that we have bread to eat, shall we cease to use our agency ; or cease to make use of the means which God has put into our power ? And so in a spiritual sense, because God giveth the increase, shall Paul cease to plant, or Apollos to water ? Surely not. Again—You appear to be so fearful of doing God's work—I would ask you, whose work do you wish to do ? Is it your own ? If so, it will be the work of the flesh and sin. Or is it the devil's work you wish to do ? If so, it will be the work of darkness and mischief.

And is it not as much the work of God to convert souls in your neighborhood as in India ? Then to be consistent, you ought to cease to preach, or exhort, or pray, or weep over, or plead with poor sinners ; lest you might be the instrument of their conversion, and thus become guilty of doing God's work. We are commanded in the word of God, in almost innumerable instances, to this effect—To WORK while it is day, &c. To LABOR for the meat that perisheth not, &c. And in one place we are expressly called, Laborers together with God (1 Cor. iii. 9.) And again, it is said, we are workers together with him, &c. (See 2 Cor. vi. 1.)

You wish me to remember Uzzah ; and so I would say to you—remember Meroz, with all the inhabitants thereof, who were to be cursed bitterly, for not doing the very thing you are so fearful of doing, viz. HELPING the Lord.—(See Judges v. 23.) And as to Uzzah, whose case frightens you so very much, I do not think it a parrallel case, or case in point ; for he had no command to touch the ark of the Lord, but the Missionary has a positive command, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.

B. Well, but did not Uzzah think he was right ?

A. It is very possible he did ; and what then ? I hope you do not think that I, or any other person, who is favorable to missionary efforts, will say that Christians ought to be governed in their conduct, merely by their own ideas of right and wrong, independent of the word of God ? On the contrary, we contend, that we must be governed by the word of God ; and that we do stand, yea, firmly stand on Scripture ground in all our missionary exertions. And, moreover, that we fall very far short, after our most vigorous efforts, of doing anything like as much as the Scriptures require us to do, as God's instruments, towards the salvation of the world. Christ himself plainly teaches us, (see Luke xvii. 10) that we are bound to do all things that are commanded us, and then say, we are unprofitable servants. And who, I would ask, can say he has done all that was commanded him, or all that God has put it in his power to do? Not one.

B. You said just now, that the Missionary had a command to go into the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; to this I have no particular objection. But what are all those about, who are not preachers? that say they also are engaged in the missionary cause?

A. Most certainly. There are two ways in which things may be done, viz.—actually and virtually. For instance, there is a house to be built; I am no mechanic, nor do I strike a stroke on the house; yet, by the blessing of God, I am enabled to find all the materials, bear all the expenses, and support all the mechanics while at work; hence it will be said of me, and justly too, that I built the house—not actually, but virtually. And so it is, my dear brother, by preaching the Gospel. Though I may be no preacher, actually; yea, I might be a delicate female, and even confined to a sick bed, yet by affording, by the blessing of God, a part of all those different secondary means which are necessary in carrying the Gospel to different and distant parts of the world, I thus become the weak, though much honored and happy instrument, in the hands of Almighty God, of preaching (that is, virtually) the glorious Gospel to perishing thousands in those destitute parts of the world, thousands of miles from me, where I never have been, nor expect ever to be. O, my brother, what Christian should not exult in, and praise the Lord for such a privilege?

B. But have we not enough unconverted people at home, to whom we may preach? Why then go so far abroad?

A. True, there are unconverted sinners at home; but do we not also preach to them? And as I know this is a very popular argument with you antisionary brethren, do suffer me to ask—Who are making the most vigorous exertions for those at home? Who ride and preach the most? Who distribute the most Bibles, Testaments, Tracts, and other good books amongst those at home? And I might add, whose labors appear to be the more abundantly blessed of God? Who, by the help of God, are the foremost in all those things at home? If you will let experience, observation, and matters of fact answer, you must, you will say, they are those who are also engaged in supporting the gospel abroad. But again, according to your principles, how can you expect any minister to go and preach to other churches and congregations, while there are unconverted persons in his own neighborhood or congregation? Or how can you wish or expect him to go and preach to others, while there is an unconverted person in his own family? You must see this argument will not do.

B. Does not charity begin at home? Why then do you take the money—the hard earnings of the poor negro, to expend in sending the gospel abroad, while these unfortunate people are measurably neglected here amongst us?

A. The missionary brethren certainly pity this unfortunate class of people as much, and do as much to benefit them as the anti-missionary brethren do, if not more. But the truth is, hundreds and thousands of these people do receive and enjoy all the benefits of a preached gospel—thousands of them are rejoicing in an humble assurance of the pardon of their sins, for Christ's sake. But, my brother, to convince you that the missionary man pities these people as much as the anti-missionary man, and that this argument of yours is a mere make-shift, a mere "get off," suffer me to ask you, Do not the anti-missionary brethren have negro slaves? What are they doing, with all the money and hard earnings of their poor negroes? Are they giving it all back to them? Do they educate them any better? Do they preach to them any more? Do they give them better opportunities in any way? Again, my brother, What is the reason you never say one word about poor negroes' hard earnings, when you see hundreds of persons laying out large sums of money, in purchasing a thousand superfluities, and even sinful amusements and gratifications of life? Yea, a man may lay out just what he pleases—he may spend his hundreds and thousands a year, in sinful and wicked amusements—he may buy barrels of whiskey and hogsheads of rum, to his own hurt and the great annoyance and injury of both civil and religious society; yet you are perfectly silent! But, let a missionary brother spend anything with a view to the furtherance of the gospel, or of religious knowledge in any way, and that moment the hue and cry is raised about charity at home, poor negroes' hard earnings, &c. &c. Oh! my brother, how is this? Does it not look like a settled opposition to the spread of the gospel, and the diffusion of religious knowledge? Is not the poor negro as much benefited by his hard earnings, yea more, when it is used in the advancement of religious knowledge, than when laid out in whiskey, to be gulped down his master's throat, or other unnecessary articles, of which the poor negro is allowed no part.

B. But is not this missionary business attended with a great deal of expense, in proportion to the profit?

A. And has it come to this? What! a Christian talk of expense, when the precious, immortal souls of men and women are at stake! Now, my brother, if it had not been that I heard a brother, at an Association once, make this same objection, I could not have believed that any Christian on earth, would ever complain of expense in such a case as this! The brother to whom I allude, observed, "It is very possible that those missionary exertions may have been and may yet be instrumental in the conversion of some few souls; but then," added he, "what is that compared with so much expense?" (or words to that effect.) Another brother, who advocated the missionary cause, replied, "Well, brother, I suppose you understand something of figures; will you be so kind as to take your pen, and calculate the value of one soul, and let us see what it is, and whether it is not as much as all that has yet been expended?" This reply appeared to strike the other brother dumb. So my brother, I would say to you. But you certainly do know, (our blessed Saviour being judge) that one soul is worth more than the WHOLE world; for "What is a man's profit, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Consequently, you must see from this, that if the whole world should be expended in missionary labors, and be instrumental in the salvation of but one soul, still it would be a world profitably and well spent.

Brother! brother! Read the 12th chap. of John, 3, 4, 5, and 6 verses, and tremble, when you so much as think of expense in such a case as this! Judas cried out much as you anti-missionary brethren are now doing about expense, money, &c. when the anointing of the blessed Redeemer's feet cost something. And remember, Judas' excuse was the great regard he pretended to have for the poor: but, O! mark well, this was not the fact; but a covetous disposition was at the bottom of his out-cry about expense! I wish you also to remember, that this expense of which you anti-missionary brethren complain, is on account of Christ's mystical body; for his church, wherever gathered from, is his body, mystically. And I have thought before now, that Jesus Christ suffered this circumstance to take place, on purpose to teach us a great lesson, viz: That if he approved of the expense bestowed, even on his own feet, how much more would he approve of that expense bestowed on his body, in the person of his saints. Moreover, I do not believe any man will ever impoverish himself by giving to the Lord, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver; and he certainly will bless those whom he loveth, as far as shall be for their good and his glory. Again, I believe many people think whatever they withhold from the Lord, or from religious purposes, is just so much clear gain, as to their worldly possessions; and, also, that whatever they may give, is just so much clear loss; but surely such persons have forgotten that "The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away." And, also, as the Lord hath said by the mouth of Solomon, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth, shall be watered also himself:" (Prov. xi. 24, 25:) and "That it is more blessed to give than to receive."— (Acts xx. 35.) Hence, you need not be surprised, my brother, as some appear to be, that the missionary brethren prosper, even in their worldly concerns. Not that I would wish any one to give from a hope of gain—God forbid; but to show that we need not be afraid of reducing ourselves to beggary, as appears to be the case with many.

B. Well, you do appear to tear up my objections on every side; but there is one thing I think you cannot deny, and that is, this missionary business has created a world of trouble and disturbance among brethren.

A. Indeed, brother B., I think this among the greatest mistakes you have made yet.

B. What! Do you deny this? And what, pray, has made all the disturbance, if it has not been this missionary business?

A. The opposition, my brother, is and has been the cause of all the disturbance! But as this is by far your most popular objection, and the hobby on which you all ride, I wish to take a little pains in removing it.—The spirit of freedom and independence, which seized upon the minds of the American people in '76, might just as well have been blamed as the cause of all the fighting and bloodshed which took place during the revolutionary war; and no doubt, all who were opposed to the cause of freedom, did blame it as the cause of all the troubles that took place. And, in a certain sense, it might be so said; but surely the guilty cause was the opposition, or the spirit of tyranny exercised towards us. Again, it might have been said by the Jews, that the coming of our blessed Redeemer into this world, was the cause of all the innocent children, of two years old and under, being put to death; and, in a certain sense, this appears to be a fact; but surely the guilty cause was the jealous, wicked-hearted Herod.—And so with the Christian religion; it has been blamed by its opposers, at different times, as the cause of bloodshed, cruelty, and persecution. And, in the first Christian era, the religion of Jesus was blamed as the cause of disturbance. Hence we hear some crying out, “These men that turn the world upside down, have come hither also.” But surely the real guilty cause was the opposition to, and the want of, more of this blessed religion. And so with a thousand other instances which might be brought forward; but let this suffice. Therefore, I say, it is not the missionary spirit and exertions which have, properly speaking, given rise to these disturbances, but the opposition has been, and now is, the real cause.

B. But we are fearful you missionary brethren will lay a tax on us after a while, and make us pay into your funds, whether we will or not.

A. Indeed! And this betrays your ignorance, my brother, to the most fearful extent. Suppose we wished to do so, how could we do it? Is not the civil authority the supreme authority of the land? According to the Constitution of the United States, as well as of each state in the Union, there is no power or authority but what is subordinate to the civil; and this civil authority expressly secures liberty of conscience in matters of religion to every individual citizen. How then could any ecclesiastical court or religious body levy and collect a tax, contrary to the constitutional authority of the Federal Government?

But the fact is, we are so far from wishing to do any such thing, that if we knew any person to give grudgingly, if it were but one cent, we would not receive it; for we still maintain, “That God loveth a cheerful giver.” And the counterpart of this must be, that he frowneth upon the penurious churl that will not give at all, or giveth grudgingly.

B. But again—I have always been told that you missionary brethren wish to make ministers, whether God has called them or not.

A. This is just like a great many other things you have been told; it is without foundation. To convince you of this, I refer you to the Minutes of Baptist Conventions and other bodies friendly to the education of ministers. In them you will find Resolutions on this subject which, I hope, will satisfy you, and for ever silence this false report which has been propagated against us. One of those Resolutions, adopted by a body in our own state, reads thus, "Every person proposed to participate in this benefit, (meaning the education fund) shall produce a regular license from the church of which he is a member, to preach the gospel in her bounds, accompanied by a certificate of his good acceptance among his brethren, and of his good report in the community at large." Second, "He shall undergo an examination by, and receive the approbation of, the executive committee of this body, as to his call of God to the gospel ministry," &c.

Hence, you see, it is not designed to make ministers, as has been falsely reported, but merely to afford the means of further improvement to those whom God has called, and whom their own churches have licensed to preach. And so far from opening a door for a carnal ministry, as some have said, they place a double guard against it.

B. Can you show any Scripture authority for a man's studying after he is called of God to preach?

A. Yes—and I should think this is the very reason why he should study. Paul exhorts Timothy and Titus, again and again, to attend to this business. He exhorts Timothy thus, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." The fact is, my brother, these two Epistles, being written to young ministers, are mostly taken up in exhortations to them, to attend to their theological studies. But our great authority in this matter, is the example given us by Jesus Christ himself. After he had chosen and ordained his twelve apostles, and set them apart to the gospel ministry, he still kept them with him about three years, except when they were out on short preaching tours, during the whole of which time, he continually taught and instructed them in the best theological school that ever was on earth. (See Mark iii. 13, 14, 15.) "And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sickness and to cast out devils." Here, my brother, you see there was a calling, and an ordaining to the work of the ministry, but yet they did not go fully into the work, but remained with their teacher; and why? Because, though they were ordained ministers, yet they were very ignorant of a great many things they ought to have known, and afterwards did know. Now, my brother, I think this ought to satisfy you, or any one else, on this subject. And this is precisely the manner of procedure in our theological institutions, against which so much is said. None are taken into them but those whom we believe to be called of God, and who are actually licensed to preach the gospel, by the churches of which they are members. And it is a rule, that those theological students shall preach as much and as often as possible during their studies. It is a most strange and erroneous idea, that because a man is called to preach the gospel, he then needs no further instruction or information. Now, my brother, you know better than this; but to convince you still further, if possible, let me turn your attention to one more striking instance of the necessity of further information, after being called to, and engaged in, the work of the gospel ministry. Apollos "was an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures;" yet when Aquila and Priscilla had heard him preach, "They took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly." (See Acts xviii. 24, 26.) Let this suffice, though I could multiply Scripture authority in proof of the point.

B. But will not this learning and theological studying, bring upon us a carnal and ungodly ministry?

A. O, my brother, why will you talk in this strange manner, or entertain these groundless fears. Paul did not think with you; but, on the contrary, he tells us, that a minister must not be "a novice, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil." Hence, you see, that Paul greatly feared the dreadful effects of an ignorant and uninformed ministry. And justly, too, for pride and ignorance go hand in hand, and are as inseparable as cause and effect; indeed, one is the effect, and the other the cause. Ignorance always begets pride, and this brings on a dreadful train of evil consequences. Remember this, my brother, if you please.—There is one thing in which learning and religion agree, and that is, the more a man has, the more he wants; and again, the less he has, the less he wants. Go to the man who makes no pretensions to religion at all, and who is just as wicked as he can be—talk to him about religion. O, he is just as good as you, or any body else; and has just as much religion as he wants. And just so it is with the illiterate man; he has just as much learning as he wants, and is as wise as any body. Now, in both these cases, those unfortunate and self-conceited men have not enough knowledge to see their deficiency. They both cry out—what good does it do? But go to men of learning or of piety,—talk to them about literature or religion, and they are both ready to acknowledge their deficiency, and tell you they want more. Why and how is this? Because they have enough to know something of their utility, and also to see how much they lack. I know, and so do you, of some brethren who do not know how to read the blessed word of God, and yet they will get up in the church and rail out against learning in the most bitter terms! Oh! brother, let us pray for such—“Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.” They know not that they are aiming a death-blow, so far as their influence goes, at the very root and foundation of all our liberties, both civil and religious? Only do away all learning and learned men, and what should we be, more than an untutored tribe of Indians? What would become of the word of God, or of what use would it be? What would become of our civil government and liberties? Where would be our legislators?—Our statesmen?—Our congressmen?—Our ministers to foreign courts, &c. &c.? Gone, all gone! And then farewell, a long and an eternal farewell, to our present liberties and glorious form of government? But, worst of all—Farewell, farewell—a long and last farewell to the word of God, the blessed book of eternal life! Do away learning and learned men, and you introduce ignorance, and ignorance would introduce its train of evils, which would overturn all civil and religious society. If it had not been for learned men, who could have gathered the word of God from the different languages in which it was written, and put it into our language? And if it were not for learned men now, how could we tell whether these scriptures are correctly translated from the Hebrew and Greek, into English, or not? Or how could we tell how many and how great errors may have already crept into our translation, if we could not run back to the original, and there examine for ourselves? And who would there be to translate the word of life into the various languages of the different tribes and nations on earth, who, as yet, have not this book in their own languages? This must be done. And glory to God, it is rapidly doing. God is now, by and through the instrumentality of learned men, giving his blessed word to various tribes and nations, who, a little while back, did not so much as know there was such a book! But now, they can read it in their own language—they do read it, and praise God for the gift.

The owl grumbled at the rising sun, because the weaker powers of his eyes were thereby eclipsed; and is it possible that men, who know but little more about learning and its benefits, than the owl did about the benefits of the sun, will complain of those bright rays of the Sun of Righteousness, which God is causing to shine forth, through the instrumentality of learning and learned men, merely because their humbler attainments are thereby eclipsed? I would fain hope better things. Once more: Did you ever know a religious man rail out against, and vilify religion and religious men? O, no. Why? Because he knew the value and utility of both, too well. And just so it is with learning and learned men. Those only who know nothing about the value of either, rail out against both. What right has a blind man, to set himself up as a judge of colors? None. And what right has a man, who has never had the advantage of an education, to set himself up as a judge of the utility of learning or learned men? Again—Suppose there is a man who cannot walk—he either has no feet, or is deprived of the use of them. What would be your surprise, to hear this man, instead of using those means whereby he might be brought to walk, or praising God that there were others who could walk, and thereby help him,—I say, what would be your surprise, if, instead of this, you should hear him continually crying out against walking, and finding fault with those who can walk? and that too, when this man must know, that those persons who can walk, are the instruments, in the hands of God, of communicating to his necessities, and that whenever he wants anything done, he is obliged to call upon those who can walk. You are ready to say, this would be the strangest man, and the strangest conduct you ever knew. Very well, I leave you to make the application.

Observe! Those who are opposed to learning, information, and mental improvement, though I do not suppose they know it, are in fact opposed to, and fighting against the best interests of their country, and striking, as before said, at the root of all our liberties, both civil and religious. Because, you will take notice, our form of government is republican, or democratical, and surely you know that in all republics, or democracies, the strength is in the people; hence you must see, that the strength of the government must be in precise proportion to the strength of the people, and this strength will be in precise proportion to the degree of information or mental endowment possessed by every individual citizen in the government.—In a word, in our form of government, the people govern. How necessary then, that each man who has a right to a vote, be possessed of that information and mental acquirement which would be necessary in a state legislator, a congressman, a governor, a president; for in reality, the people are the legislators, the congressmen, and the president; only it is in the person of those whom they have chosen. For all civil officers, from the constable to the president, are only the creatures of the people. I hope, my brother, you will take this subject into serious consideration. I feel much concerned in this business. The Baptists have always been considered the greatest friends to their country, and to republicanism.—This is the spirit of their form of church government, and this they adopted because they conceived it to be the spirit breathed forth by the word of God. Oh! let it not be said, that Baptists have become the enemies of their country, by trying to stifle learning and mental improvement, which are two of the strong pillars on which republicanism stands.

B. But if God wants a learned man, can he not call him?

A. True, my brother, and if God chooses, he can make one acre of your land, (and that without your clearing it, planting or ploughing it,) yield one or ten thousand bushels of corn. What is the reason, my brother, that you are always advocating those measures which require nothing on your part but laziness?

B. Have not some unlearned ministers been greatly blessed in their ministerial labors, and very useful men?

A. Yes, and we thank God for it. But these men were possessed of clear heads, strong minds, and sound hearts. They were not opposed to education, but encouraged it in others, and lamented the want of it in themselves. But, I ask, does the fact of those men being useful, prove anything against the utility of education? Surely not. It only proves they would have been more useful with the advantage of an education!

B. Well, but are not some ministers who have not had the advantage of an education, as great preachers and useful men, and even more so, than some who have had this advantage.

A. I am perfectly free to acknowledge all this. But I still maintain my position, and contend that this, all this, does not go to prove anything against the utility of education in others, nor does it prove that those very men would not have been greater preachers and more useful men with the advantage of an education. Suppose you have one of your hands tied behind your back, and I have the free use of both of mine, but still, notwithstanding this great disadvantage on your part, you are able to lift a greater weight and do more work with your one hand, than I can with both of mine—I ask, does this prove that two hands are not better than one? Or does it prove that you could not do still better, if you had the use of the other hand? Or does it prove that I could do just as well with one hand as both? Surely it proves nothing of all this. I leave you to make the application.

B. Well, my brother, you cut me off at such a rate in all my arguments, that I would give up and call for quarters, if it was not for one thing, and that is, as you must surely agree, that the disciples of our Saviour were ignorant and unlearned men?

A. I know this is a generally received opinion, even by many who are in favor of a well informed ministry; but I can by no means subscribe to the idea. And I think a few minutes' reflection will convince you, and them too, that you are all under a very great mistake. We have ample proof at hand that those men were neither ignorant nor unlearned, according to the ideas associated with these words; or according to their modern signification. Remember, it was Peter and John who were called ignorant and unlearned; (see Acts iv. 13;) now we have the writings of both those men in Greek. Compare their writings with those of the best Greek scholars and classic authors, such as Xenophon, Homer, and others, and you will find their style, language, &c. are pure and correct. This, then, ought to settle the point. Because, if you can write as correctly, in all respects, as an acknowledgedly good scholar, this surely ought to prove, to the satisfaction of all, your good scholarship. But do observe, my brother, Peter and John labored under a vast disadvantage, viz: They were not Grecians, nor was the Greek their mother language; hence, we see, they were capable of writing, and that correctly too, in a language that was not their own. Surely this is more than sufficient to prove my point. Your mother language is English, but suppose you can take your pen and throw together the most excellent ideas in the Greek language, in a style as pure, as chaste, and as grammatical as the very best Greek scholar, do you think you ought to be called ignorant and un- learned? Surely not. Well, such was the case with Peter and John, and all the others so far as is known to us. Matthew was called from the receipt of custom; this office he was unfit for, unless he was a good scholar, and capable of writing and transacting business in various languages, as must be evident to you and any one else. But again—The disciples were three years in the best theological school and under the best teacher that ever was on earth, previous to their going fully into the work of the ministry. And, in addition to all this, God, by a miracle, enabled them, on the day of Pentecost, to preach the gospel in thirteen different languages. (See Acts ii. 7—13.) Now I wish to be clearly understood; I do not deny but that these men might have been styled ignorant and unlearned in a comparative sense, that is, when compared with Paul, Gamaliel, &c., but they were by no means ignorant and unlearned according to the ideas we attach to, or associate with those terms.

B. But is it not said, God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things which are mighty?

A. Yes; but if you will examine this chapter, you will find that Paul includes himself throughout, as a part of those weak things; and, therefore, it cannot answer your purpose, as to an uninformed ministry; for Paul was learned in all the languages, science, and wisdom of his day and time. The fact is, Paul is here speaking in a kind of satirical manner, in accordance with the prejudiced ideas of the Jews and Greeks.—Hence you find in this same chapter, Paul, in this kind of satirical sense, calls the preaching of the gospel, and a crucified Saviour, foolishness and a stumbling block. “For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness.” (See 1 Cor. i. 22, 23.) The fact is, the whole plan of salvation by a crucified Jesus, was considered nothing but a parcel of nonsense, foolishness, and weakness by the unbelieving Jews and Greeks; though it was, indeed, the wisdom and power of God unto salvation, to all that believed, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

B. Well, brother A, I acknowledge I have different views of this part of the subject, from what I ever had before, and am heartily willing to give it up. You have brought some, yea many things to my mind, which I hope I shall never forget. I will take the whole of what you have said into deep consideration, and look to God for the aid and direction of his holy Spirit.

A. May the Lord grant you the aid necessary to the forming of just ideas, is my most sincere prayer.

B. But there is one thing that appears to be wrong on the part of you missionary brethren concerning us, and that is, you appear to have taken up the idea that we are opposed to the spread of the gospel. God forbid that this should be the case.

A. I too, my brother, can heartily say, God forbid! But suffer me to ask—suppose you were opposed to it in every shape and sense, and did not pretend to deny it, how else could you act, than as you do? What else could you do than speak against it publicly and privately, and preach against it from the pulpit, and do all you could to enlist the prejudices of the religious public against it! What else, I ask, could you do?

B. O, but we do not pray against it.

A. True. And is not this full proof that you are conscious you are wrong? For if your cause is good, why not go to God with it? If you are right in opposing those means, which are, in their nature, calculated to spread the gospel and a knowledge of religious truth, it certainly would be right to pray to God to stop it, and to bless the feeble exertions which you are making against its spread. Yea, I do insist, my brother, the very first step towards consistency on the part of those ministers who are opposed to the missionary cause, is to quit preaching themselves, because every gospel sermon is a missionary effort. The next step towards consistency, would be to quit praying for the spread of the gospel, for every sincere prayer is an effort in the missionary cause. And the third and last step to be completely consistent, would be to pray against it; for our preaching and praying surely ought always to correspond.

B. This, my brother, would be dreadful!—awful!!

A. It would, indeed: nor would I by any means advise you to do so. But still I say, to be consistent with yourselves, you ought to do it. But, my brother, I do not think this would be any worse than being opposed to Bible Societies: for I think this is, in effect, rising up in open and positive opposition to the word of God! and I think if you were to reflect seriously upon it, you would see with me. Because, when you protest against any society, it is not the mere circumstance of their meeting together which you oppose; no, but it is the business in which this society is engaged. Well, in what are Bible Societies engaged. Why, in sending the Bible into different, distant, and destitute parts of the world—they are engaged in putting the word of eternal life into the houses and hands of poor dying sinners. But you protest against this. Now the question is—How can you oppose this, unless you are opposed to the Bible, and think it an improper book to send abroad?—an improper book for sinners to read! Alas! my brother, for the Lord's sake—for your own soul's sake—for the soul's sake of lost and perishing sinners, reflect, O! reflect what you are about!

B. Truly this looks bad enough!

A. It surely does, but it looks no worse than it really is. It is not a whit worse than denying to people the liberty of conscience!

B. O, brother, I hope you do not accuse us of that too?

A. I do not know how you can get over it! For instance, I feel for my fellow dying man, and desire to be instrumental in doing something for his spiritual good. I therefore think it my duty to give a part of what the Lord has given me, towards sending the gospel where the people are dying for lack of knowledge; and this I do positively believe, before God and my own conscience, to be my bounden duty. But you say I shall not—if I do you will turn me out of the church. Thus you go as far as your power extends in depriving me of the liberty of conscience. And what is this mighty crime for which I must be banished from the church and the house of God? The great crime—Oh! can my tongue utter it?—the great crime is, that I desire to see sinners saved from eternal death! My crime, my deep, and black, and dismal crime is, that I gave something towards the spread of the gospel! My only and unpardonable crime is, that I threw one mite into the treasury of the Lord! For this I must be expelled from church privileges, though my conscience, and the word of God, and the spirit of the gospel, all told me, and yet tell me, it was right—it was my duty: while others can spend their scores of dollars for rum and whiskey to the injury of their own health, the detriment of their family, and the great annoyance of both civil and religious society, and yet maintain their place and standing in the church! Now, my brother, wherein does all this differ from the most settled spirit of persecution and Popery?

B. I hope and trust you are not going to palm persecution and Popery upon us!

A. No. I am not going to do it; and would pray God that you might be kept from both. But for the life of me, I cannot tell what else to make of your conduct. You know as well as I do, that it is the spirit of Popery to keep the people in a state of as great ignorance as possible—to keep the Bible out of the hands of the people—to deprive the people of the liberty of conscience in matters of religion—to keep all the means of religious knowledge from the people. The Pope is issuing his prohibitory edicts against missionary enterprize—against Missionary, Bible, and Religious Tract Societies, &c. And why all this? Because the Pope, and all the papal authorities, see and know, that if these things become common, the reign of Popish darkness will come to an end. And now, my brother, reflect, when I ask you, what are our anti-missionary brethren doing, different from the Pope and Popish authorities? Are they not issuing their decrees and edicts against all Missionary, Bible, and Tract Societies? Are they not, in effect, (as we have already shown) denying the liberty of conscience, so far as their power extends? Are they not doing all in their power to stop the progress of religious knowledge? Does not all this breathe the very life and spirit of Popery? If there is any difference, my brother, I acknowledge I am so stupid I cannot see it. And if you, or any one else, will point out to me the difference, I will thank you for the information. The fact is, if you will compare the different publications, put forth by the Pope himself and the different papal authorities, against Missionary, Bible, and Tract Societies, with those put forth by the anti-missionary brethren against the same societies, you will find they are so exactly alike, in all respects, as to induce the belief that one must have been borrowed, or copied from the other!! This circumstance ought, surely, to be enough to open the eyes of our opposing brethren.

B. I do acknowledge, that there is something very much alike in their conduct and ours; but then we have not got to burning the Bible yet; and you know the Popish authorities have done this in many instances.

A. True, my brother, you have not got to this extent yet. But do you not bid fair for it! And, further, would it not be perfectly consistent with the rest of your conduct to do so. For it really appears to me if it is wrong for Bible Societies to send the Bible abroad into the world, it would be right for you to burn it! Understand me, my brother. I say, it appears to me, that if it be wrong for us to publish the Bible, it is, of course, RIGHT for you to burn it!!

B. Ah! my brother, this alarms me!!

A. Well it may,—it ought.

B. There is one thing, however, that comforts me a little, and that is—If this missionary business is of the Lord, he will bless it, and carry it on. And, further, if it is not, it will come to nothing.

A. This is true. And if you are willing to let this be the criterion whereby to determine whether it is of the Lord or not, then you must give up the point. For, thanks be to Almighty God, he has already blessed it; and is now blessing and carrying it on in the most wonderful manner. This, I know, you may be disposed to question. But surely, my brother, we cannot deny the combined testimony of hundreds of the most pious and eminent ministers of the gospel, belonging to the Methodist, Episcopalian, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Baptist denominations. All these, with thousands of private characters, declare to us, the glorious effects produced, by and through the agency of missionary exertions, at home and abroad, of which they have been eye and ear witnesses. Enlightened travellers and officers of government, who have visited many of our missionary stations, declare the same things. We see letters from all parts, written by men of piety and integrity, giving circumstantial accounts of these important facts. And there are not a few in our own churches in this state, whose names we could mention, who own these missionary labors as the means, in the hand of God, of their conversion. I know of several myself, who acknowledge religious tracts as the means of bringing them to a knowledge of the truth. And shall we—can we say, all these have become common liars? Surely not.

B. But will not God's purposes stand. And after all your missionary labors, will there be one soul saved, more than what God saw from all eternity would be saved?

A. To be sure God's purposes will stand, and I am rejoiced in the fact. But then, what of all this? Now, I would not think this old, worn out, Antinomian, and infidel excuse for laziness and wickedness, worthy of any notice, were it not that I know it is destroying the usefulness of many, and encouraging thousands to go on in a course of sin. I mean that the false conclusions, drawn from these premises, are doing this injury. I would, therefore, say, (as I have said before) that whatever may be said on this subject, will hold just as true when applied to our preaching and praying, at home, in our own congregations and families, as when applied to our missionary labors abroad; and, also, when applied to things of a temporal nature, just as much as when applied to things of a spiritual nature. It is just as true, that God's purposes will stand with regard to our crops, and after all our toiling and sweating there will not be one grain of corn more made than what God already knew would be made. What then? Are we on this account to lie down and sleep? Are God's purposes and foreknowledge against, or opposed to man's agency? If you will read Acts xviii. 9, 10, you will find that God himself teaches a very different doctrine, and assigns as a reason why Paul must speak and not hold his peace while at Corinth, that he had much people in that city. Now if Paul had been an Antinomian, might he not have said, "Well, Lord, if thou hast these people, why then need I preach to turn them unto thee?" Also, see Paul's account of the shipwreck. Though he had been assured by a messenger from heaven that they should all get safe to land, yet when he saw the shipmen, or sailors, about to escape, he tells the centurion—"Except these abide in the ship ye cannot be saved." My dear brother, I do verily believe that this old Antinomian sentiment causes thousands of Baptists to live in the neglect of duty; and no doubt keeps vast numbers of them from engaging in the missionary cause.

B. But are we not saved by grace?

A. O, yes. And I am so willing to subscribe to this doctrine, that I say it is by grace, (that is, unmerited favor) that I have a morsel of bread to eat. And now, brother B, as it is growing late, and is time for us to draw to a close, let me ask you a question or two before we part.

1. Would it not be well for you to stop your opposition, lest you be found fighting against God?

2. Will it not be a poor death-bed consolation to think you never gave one cent to the spread of the gospel; but, on the contrary, always opposed those who did?

3. Why do you not throw away all the hymn books now in use, for they were all put out by missionary men, and abound with missionary hymns, such as this, viz:

"Go, Missionary and proclaim
The kind Redeemer you have found;
Publish his ever-precious name,
To all the wond'ring nations round." &c.

4. Now how would you anti-missionary brethren have this hymn? Would you have it to read thus? viz :

“ Stop, Missionary, don't proclaim
 The kind Redeemer you have found
 Publish not his glorious name,
 To all the wond'ring nations round.” &c.

5. How do you think this would sound, bursting forth from the hearts and mouths of a congregation of Christians? It would certainly sound oddly enough; but to be consistent with yourselves you ought to have your anti-missionary hymns and prayers, as well as your anti-missionary sermons.

6. Do you think that those brethren can be actuated by a good spirit, who are always urging a separation among the Baptists—always urging a non-fellowship?

7. For the Lord's sake, and for the peace of the churches, ought we not all to be willing to live and let live?

B. Yes, we ought, my dear brother; here we agree exactly.

A. And I hope we shall always agree in this particular; for it has always been a great grief to me to hear any one urging a non-fellowship, and a separation on account of things which ought not to disturb our fellowship. If I think it is my duty to give, let me enjoy the liberty of my conscience; and if you do not think it your duty to give, I am willing to let you enjoy the liberty of your conscience.

B. I hope so too. Farewell—may the Lord bless you.

A. Farewell, my brother—the Lord bless you too, and teach us all our duty, is my prayer.

B. } Amen.
A. }

THE SUBSTANCE
OF
MRS. WADE'S ADDRESSES.

It is perhaps known to most of you, my sisters, that the last ten years of my life have been spent among the benighted and degraded heathen. During this period, I have been in several different countries, and had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the customs and modes of worship in each. Before I had witnessed the superstitions, the cruelties, and the debased habits of a heathen people, I could not fully credit the accounts I read from those who had; I thought they must be exaggerated, or could not apply generally to whole communities. But on heathen ground I have been led to exclaim, "The half was not told me." What I now relate will be facts which have come under my own observation—what I have seen and heard.

You have all doubtless heard of the cruelties and abominations connected with the idolatrous worship of Hindostan, and the wretched, degraded condition of its inhabitants. As I spent two or three years among the Hindoos, I unavoidably saw more of this than can be described. The car of their idol, Juggernaut, a huge structure rolled on ponderous wheels, crushes beneath its weight numbers of victims who prostrate themselves before it, that they may thus be sacrificed to the god. Immense numbers perform long pilgrimages of many hundred miles, to pay him honor, sometimes measuring the distance by continually prostrating themselves at length on the ground. Multitudes inflict upon themselves the most excruciating tortures to propitiate their gods—such as having a large iron hook fastened in their back, from which they hang suspended, and swing, &c. Infants are frequently cast into the river Ganges, which they consider sacred, as an offering, and many are destroyed in other ways. I have not myself attended the burning of a widow on the funeral pile of her husband, for I could not endure the spectacle. But such occurrences have repeatedly taken place very near us. The sick and the aged are carried out by their relatives, and left in the open air on the bank of the Ganges to perish without care or kindness; and jackals and vultures often begin to prey upon them while they are alive. The remains of a dead mother may sometimes be seen exposed on the road to Juggernaut, while a living infant is lying by her side, and no passer-by takes pity upon it. Every kind of vice is practised in this country without shame. Lying, theft, and robbery are not considered disgraceful. The most indecent and licentious practices are taught in their religious books, as part of the worship of their gods; and are shamelessly committed in the sacred temples. It is not surprising then, that the same abominations universally abound among all classes.

The abject, miserable condition of females in heathen countries can scarcely be conceived of in Christianized communities. From her childhood, the Hindoo female, with the exception of the lower classes, is entirely confined, being never permitted to go abroad, unless indeed through the displeasure of her male relatives she is thrust out from her home, or otherwise deprived of resources, and compelled to seek her own subsistence. If she even venture to peep out from her miserable habitation, she incurs the anger of her jealous husband, or rather tyrannical lord, and perhaps receives a cruel beating. Through life she is his degraded slave, and at his death she is expected to burn herself on the funeral pile with his body. If she refuse to do this, infamy and abuse are her portion; and she generally prefers an honorable death, to an ignominious and wretched life. So servile is her condition, that if she were to refuse to submit to the will of her lord, or utter a complaint, or attempt to avoid the evils of her lot, she would surely meet with abuse from all her male relations—father, husband, brothers, sons—all conspire to hold her in degradation and bondage. So contemptible are females in the estimation of the other sex, and so well does the mother know the mode of life to which her daughter is introduced, that the birth of a female infant is considered by all a misfortune. By the father and brothers it is looked upon with detestation; by the mother, to say the best, with commiseration. If it is not sacrificed, or in some way put to death by its unnatural parents, that they may rid themselves of the trouble of taking care of it, which is a very common practice in regard to all infants—the little girl is through childhood a neglected being—left without clothing and without culture, and is finally consigned to the same miserable lot which had been her mother's. No wonder that mothers so untaught, so debased, should be without natural affection. And they are every where found abusing their children and exposing them to all kinds of danger and cruelty.

This is a very imperfect view of the superstitions and cruelties abounding in Hindostan; but I have said enough to shew you that the people there are awfully degraded. Let us however, my sisters, rejoice that there is a bright side to this gloomy picture. Though thousands and millions of the poor deluded Hindoos are still practising the cruelties and living in all the moral wretchedness I have described, yet this is not the case with all. The blessed gospel which for some years missionaries have preached among them, is now producing a cheering influence in various directions. Many are praising God for the happy change it has effected even in their temporal circumstances—the introduction of peace and comfort into the domestic circle, &c. and especially for the glorious hopes and prospects it has opened to them beyond the grave. In Calcutta and the neighboring villages, in Monghyr, Dinapore, and even in the dark province of Orissa, little churches of converted Hindoos have been gathered; and if Christians will do their duty and send an adequate supply of missionaries, Bibles and tracts, I doubt not these churches will multiply, and converts become numerous as “the drops of morning dew.”

Within the last two or three years the Suttee, or burning of widows on the funeral pile of their husbands, has been abolished by the English government, in all that portion of the country under their jurisdiction. So that though there is still a strong prejudice among the natives in favor of this cruel rite, it is hoped that it will soon cease to be practised among them.

But it is in Burmah that the greater portion of my missionary life has been spent. That country contains a population considerably greater than the whole of these United States, and is under a government wholly despotic. Life and property are held at the will of the ruling powers. The people are subject to every oppression from those in authority. If a man has property, he conceals it and appears poor, lest some superior should covet his possessions, throw him into prison, and seize all he has. Crimes of every kind are as prevalent, and attended with as little disgrace, as in Hindostan. Indeed, he who can lie or steal most adroitly, without detection by the government, is admired by his countrymen. If he is detected, some penalty is inflicted upon him, unless he has money to bribe the officers, in which case he can commit any crime with impunity. Hence the Burmans have no confidence in each other; as there is no integrity among them, so there is no trust. It is true that in that country immorality is not inculcated as part of their religious worship; on the contrary, they have a tolerably correct system of morals in their sacred books. But there is no healthful influence in society, nothing in public opinion, to enforce its practice. Custom sanctions licentiousness of every description; the commission of the worst vices does not degrade one in the estimation of others. Think what must be the condition of an entire country more deeply sunk in iniquity than the most polluted sections of your large cities, and where no surrounding restraints are imposed upon the outbreakings of sin. A form of marriage is in use, but there is also a form of separation; so that there are continually occurring marriages and separations. The results of such a state of things can only be imagined. Parents care little for their children, but often unmercifully beat and abandon them; and fathers and husbands sell wives and children as slaves, whenever they have occasion to avail themselves of the profits of such a sale. Mothers, too, will do this. I have very frequently seen a mother apparently fond of her child and caressing it one hour, and the next beating it cruelly, or have known of her selling it into slavery. And this inhumanity is not confined to the outcasts of society, among whom such conduct might be found even in this country; it is common, and not disreputable. Infants are not drowned or otherwise sacrificed, as a religious rite, by the Burmans, but they are sometimes destroyed by their unnatural parents. Females are not confined within doors among them as they are in Hindostan, but they are taught nothing, are kept without clothing in childhood, are treated with contempt through life, and employed in the most servile labors. The miserable habitations of these degraded people exhibit the most forlorn and loathsome appearance. Domestic comfort is unknown among them.

The religion of the Burmans is absurd in the extreme, and devoid of all motive to a correct life, and all consolation in death. The object of their worship is Gaudama, a being who they say appeared in our world about two thousand four hundred years ago. He had existed in various states, as man, beast, reptile, demi-god, &c. before he arrived at the most exalted merit; and now he has attained the highest good they have any idea of—that is, annihilation. To cease to be, is the summit of all their hopes. They worship Gaudama, only because they consider him to have attained superior merit, not because he is the creator or governor of the world, which they believe to have come into existence itself. They have no idea of an eternal God, the Creator of all things, but believe that all matter is self-existent. They suppose that all mankind pass through what they call “an endless whirlpool of transmigration”—that is, that when they die out of one state, they are born into another; he that is now a man may next become a beast, afterward a reptile, then a man again, or a woman, &c. And so great a misfortune is it to be a female, that the sex pray to become men in the next state. It is often thought in Christian countries, that the heathen have no knowledge of right and wrong, and are not therefore accountable for their actions. They indeed have no knowledge of God’s revealed word or of a Saviour, and consequently are not guilty for not “believing on him of whom they have not heard.” But they do know the distinction between right and wrong in their dealings with each other, as well as we do. The sacred books of the Burmans prohibit lying, theft, adultery, the use of spirituous liquors, &c. and this is well known by the people. They believe in a future existence, where all the sin they have committed will be punished. They are without expectation of forgiveness, but believe that for every sin they must suffer for ages. Yet notwithstanding this, they go on through life, adding iniquity unto iniquity. They say, that after living in many different states and forms, and suffering ages of punishment for every sin, they shall then enjoy happiness in proportion to the merit they may have acquired in this world; and if they have acquired sufficient merit, they may attain, after a long period, to a divine state, and then to annihilation, their highest hope. Looking forward, as they do, to an existence in the form of various animals, and having no hope of obtaining the forgiveness of their sins, these people generally are greatly distressed at the approach of death. Surely their condition is dark and pitiable. Such as I have described it, though but very faintly and partially, is the life, and such the end of the Burman. A complete picture of his wretchedness, superstition, and degradation, I cannot portray. It must be seen to be realized.

And now, my dear sisters, having told you something of the condition in which we find these poor creatures, I will give you some idea of what has been effected through the blessing of God upon the labors of a few missionaries, for their improvement in temporal circumstances, and the salvation of their souls. The mission was commenced twenty years ago. About three years of that time, its operations were entirely suspended by the war which took place between the English and Burmese. It was imagined by the natives that all white foreigners were leagued with the British, in opposition to themselves; and consequently they all, including the missionaries, were arrested and thrown into prison; the greatest confusion prevailed throughout the country, and it was long before confidence and quiet were restored. But leaving out the time in which the work of the mission was suspended, there had not been in the whole remainder, up to the period of our leaving the country, the average labor of two missionaries who were preachers, for that vast multitude of people. An additional number have gone out within two or three years; some had arrived before we left. Still, with so few laborers, the language has been acquired; the gospel is continually preached to the people; several tracts and small books have been prepared and circulated among them ; the New Testament translated, printed, and distributed ; and if brother Judson's life and health have been spared, the Old Testament is probably now translated and ready for printing. Burman boys are as generally taught to read, in their own schools, as the boys in this country are, though girls are not taught. Consequently, we rarely find a man who cannot read. The demand for books is urgent and increasing. The people are anxious to read and learn what this new religion is. To supply this whole reading nation, exceeding the population of the United States, there are attached to the mission three printers, and four printing presses. The present number of missionaries is six. But who will not exclaim, "What are these among so many?" What supply would six preachers, three printers, and four printing presses be for this country? As the fruit of their labor, the missionaries have had the happiness of seeing four hundred natives giving evidence of piety, and joining the churches at the different stations, besides upwards of a hundred English soldiers. Several have died in the cheering hope of a blissful immortality. A number are now engaged in preaching the gospel to their countrymen, and are valuable aids to the missionaries. A hundred dollars a year is an ample sum for the support of a native preacher, and they will live on considerably less for the sake of carrying the news of a Saviour to their perishing brethren. Sometimes some of the native Christians will get the means of supporting their families a month in advance, by their own efforts, and will then go out in the neighboring country, distributing tracts and conversing with the people. Though they are very poor, they are anxious to make every effort to promote the spread of the gospel, and frequently sacrifice little comforts for this object. Their food is at best simple, being generally rice and curry. But I have known these dear people deny themselves of the latter, and live occasionally upon rice and salt, that they might have a few cents to aid in sending out tracts or preachers, in building a zayat, or for some similar object ; and they will carefully save their half cents and quarter cents for the same purpose. O, my sisters, they are lovely Christians indeed, so conscientious, so humble, so grateful for the gospel, to you who have sent it to them, and to the missionaries who have carried it. It would affect your hearts to hear them pray for you and your children. I commenced a weekly female prayer-meeting some years ago at Maulmein, which all the female members of the church regularly attend. To give all an opportunity of being present, and time for offering their petitions and making any communications that they may wish, the meeting is held through the day, and several attend at a time, and then give place to others. One will take care of the children of several others, that they may attend, and afterward her own are taken care of by another; thus all are found at the meeting in the course of the day, and all take part in the exercises. From the time of their first joining the church, they are always ready to try to pray in our meetings—there is no backwardness, no fear. And here, if they have any difficulty or trial, they make it known, and ask for counsel; and if any little misunderstanding or hard feeling has taken place between any of them, it is talked over and settled, that no disturbances may arise. As I had told them that many who contributed to send them the gospel, had children that were not Christians, they agreed to pray for their conversion. My dear sisters, could you hear these Burman sisters, so lately sunk in the utmost degradation, praying for the conversion of your children, your hearts would be melted. When I have heard of the precious revivals of religion in America, and of the number of youth that have been gathered into the church of Christ, I have thought, eternity alone would disclose what proportion of this has been accomplished in answer to these prayers. Indeed, I have enjoyed sweeter seasons at these meetings than I ever did in any meeting in America.—The native Christians, generally, males as well as females, are much in the habit of prayer; it seems to be their delight. Owing to their manner of living, and the slight structure of their houses, they have not convenient opportunities for retirement in the day; and it is not uncommon for them to spend hours of the night in pouring out their hearts in prayer. On my bed, I have frequently heard more or less distinctly, from different directions, several voices thus engaged. They are not ashamed to have it known that they pray; and if they are so circumstanced as to have no other opportunity, they will kneel in one corner of the room, with their back toward the persons in it, and pray there. When any of them are going out as preachers, or to distribute tracts, they come to the missionary, who gives such advice as he considers necessary, and unites with them in prayer; they pray over the tracts for God's blessing upon their distribution, and then go out two and two. The preachers are sometimes absent for a month. From some of these excursions they will return disheartened—they have been opposed, ridiculed, stoned, and have seen no good results from their labors. The missionary encourages them, prays with them, tells them they must not always expect success, &c. and soon they are desirous of going again, when perhaps they will return highly encouraged, bringing others with them to get books and hear more about the new religion. These Christians are always endeavoring to persuade their unconverted friends to embrace the gospel. When three or four meet, their conversation is not about their own affairs, or unprofitable matters, but the interests of their souls. If a few are laboring together in an occupation which allows of conversation, those of the party who are Christians, are sure to be urging upon the others the subject of religion; and will perhaps bring a neighbor thus interested, to the missionary's house at evening worship.—Their Christian affection for each other is very conspicuous, especially in the seasons of communion at the Lord's table. They are very careful to receive that ordinance in the exercise of brotherly love, as well as to seek preparation of heart in every particular, for its proper observance. They would not think it possible that Christians could sit down together at the Lord's supper, with unkind feelings toward each other, or any misunderstanding which would disturb their harmony as brethren. If any little difference has occurred between any of their number, they are sure to seek a reconciliation before the communion season arrives. And they seem during the week previous to the celebration of the ordinance, to endeavor to get into a suitable frame for it. It is cheering to our hearts, and it would be to yours, my sisters, to see such humble, devoted Christians as these dear converts are. I long to return to them, and to that land of darkness where there are so many perishing for the bread of life, and so few hands ready to bestow it.

The Karens are a very interesting people, inhabiting the interior of Burmah, and making the whole number of inhabitants in that empire nearly twice as large as in this country. They have no system of religion, and do not worship idols; when first known by the missionaries had no written language, and of course could not read or write. A few of them can speak and read the Burman language. They have had a tradition that white foreigners would sometime bring them the word of the Eternal God; and when they heard of the missionary, brother Boardman, being at Tavoy, they sent a deputation to know whether he had this word. On hearing that he had, a company were soon sent to him with a book which had somehow found its way to them about twelve years before, and to which they had from that period paid their worship, though they could not read it—wishing to know what it was. It proved to be an English Common Prayer Book. They were easily dissuaded from worshipping the book, and gave it to brother Boardman; and we now have it with us. (The book was here exhibited by Mrs. Wade.) They anxiously desired books which would tell them about God, and begged the teacher, as they call the missionaries, to go out among their people and instruct them. He soon visited them, and as the fruit of his labors, and those of others, about two hundred have given evidence of becoming Christians, and been baptized. It is of their appearance as Christians, that I have spoken as well as of the Burmans. They are equally affectionate, humble, and devoted. They frequently importune us to give them the Bible, or some book which will instruct them respecting our religion. But when we became acquainted with them, we did not know their language; and after learning it sufficiently, we found that we must form an alphabet and reduce it to writing; and then translate and print books, before they could be put into their hands. Some small books have already been prepared; but we are obliged to tell them that it must be some time before we can give them the Bible; that other missionaries must come out to help us, and they will be obliged to learn the language before they can translate the Bible, and thus it will be years before they can have it. "O," they exclaim, "many of us must go down to our graves and be lost, before that time—do give us something that will tell us about God, before we die." Many times we have been obliged to deny books to Burmans as well as Karens, when they have come begging for them. Frequently persons living at a distance from us, have accidentally seen a tract, or met with one of the native preachers, in some of their tours, and come to us to hear something more of our religion, and get larger books. After conversing some time, they will say, "I must go home; I live in such a village, and have a good distance to go; now give me a book to carry back, that I may read all you have been telling me when I get home." My dear sisters, you cannot imagine the distress it has caused me, when I have been obliged to say, as I have in a multitude of cases, that I had not even a tract to give them. But they would reply, "We cannot remember all you have told us, we shall forget it when we get home—give us a tract, or only one leaf, that we may have it to look at, and remember your instructions." Truly, my friends, in all I have suffered in body or mind,—in parting from my relatives and loved native country, in the privations and dangers of a missionary life—nothing has caused me such bitter anguish of heart, as being compelled to send away these poor, perishing, imploring fellow-creatures without one leaf, containing the words of eternal life. And this we must do, because we had not the means of printing half the books and tracts, which were anxiously called for. O, how many times have I thought that if Christians in America could see this immense population destitute of the word of salvation, yet having in many instances heard enough to lead them to seek after it, when not a leaf could be furnished for want of the necessary means—they must be willing to make sacrifices, and impart liberally of their substance, to aid in supplying them with the precious volume.

And now, my dear friends, I will tell you the manner in which we live, and how we spend our time in that land of darkness I have been trying to describe. The common houses of the country, and such as the missionaries live in, are constructed of posts put into the ground so as to inclose a space of the proper dimensions, covered with mats or a kind of basket-work of bamboo, and having similar mats for a floor. The roof is covered with a thatch of leaves, and in the sides is here and there an opening for a window, for we had not a pane of glass in our houses. The house is put up in a few days, and costs from thirty to seventy dollars. It may contain as many rooms as are necessary, partitions being made by the same matting as covers the outside. A bedstead made by the missionary, which saves the sum necessary for a more expensive one, or in its place a little elevation in one corner of a room, of the same material as the house is built of, answers every purpose of convenience for lodging; while two or three chairs and some stools, with a plain table, make up the principal furniture of the habitation. A few dishes of the plainest kind supply our table. Though our houses are furnished in the cheapest, simplest manner, we aim to have them, and to be ourselves, patterns of neatness in all respects. It would be an interesting spectacle to you, to take a view of brother Judson in his little dwelling, where all is perfect neatness, yet exceedingly simple; and though cheapness is studied in his accommodations and apparel, the dignity and appearance necessary to secure an influence in society is preserved. He is confided in and respected in the highest degree, by all Europeans who know him, as well as by the natives. The Burmans are exceedingly filthy and disgusting in their habits; hence it is of the first importance that we exhibit to them an example of cleanliness and comfort. And when they embrace Christianity, we immediately see considerable improvement in this respect.

The missionary puts up, at some convenient place, an open building called a zayat, being only a thatched roof supported by posts and having a floor, to which he goes in the morning directly after breakfast, and remains through the day. Here the people are continually stopping to converse with him; he reads from the scriptures and other books, explains to them, and answers their objections, and gives books to those who apply for them. Thus many are continually hearing religious truth, and many tracts and books are scattered in various parts of the country. Great numbers are led to examine the new religion, and visit the missionary to inquire farther respecting it, merely from seeing some of our tracts, and are often in consequence hopefully converted; and in some cases persons have been found giving good evidence of piety, who had never seen a living teacher. While the missionary is thus employed, his wife is at home conversing with females who go to her for advice, instruction, &c. At the close of the day, at the sound of a kind of bell, the family assemble for evening worship, and the native brethren living near, attend, and frequently others who have been persuaded by them in the course of the day, or been at the zayat, and wish to hear more. There are various other duties continually occurring, such as preparing and translating books, oversight of schools, &c. but this is the manner in which our time is generally spent from Monday morning to Saturday night. On Sabbath we have public worship and preaching. And oh, it is a delightful sight, to see the congregation assembled in a neat bamboo meeting-house which they have built themselves, seated on their clean mats, their children with them, all tidy in their appearance, and worshipping God and hearing the gospel with sincerity, humility, gratitude and joy. This compensates us for every toil and suffering.

And now my dear sisters, in view of the wretched, degraded, perishing condition of these poor creatures—in view of the open door for access to them, and the great demand for laborers and means—of the interesting character they exhibit as Christians—and in remembrance of the sufferings of our Divine Redeemer for us, and his last command, “Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel”—shall we not be willing to make every exertion to send them the gospel. Indeed, if you only gave up some of the superfluities of life, without relinquishing one of its comforts, if you would only dispense with elegant articles of furniture, and various ornaments in dress, you might devote large sums of money to this object. Many a five and ten dollar note, and even much larger sums might be spared without the least inconvenience to yourselves. And when you stand before the bar of God, and meet there the benighted Burman and Karen, who sought after the word of the eternal God from Christians, but could not obtain it, and perished in their darkness, oh, with what feelings will you recollect the many useless gratifications in which you indulged, when these precious souls were dying by thousands without the knowledge of a Saviour! Shall I return to that dear people, and refuse one who has come many miles to get a book which would tell him how he could be saved, refuse him even a single leaf, because we have not the money which will enable us to print books?

Support of Native Preachers in Burmah.

It will be observed that Mrs. Wade states in her communications, that a Burman or Karen preacher can be supported at an annual expense of one hundred dollars at most, and that they often live on a less sum, and devote themselves to preaching the gospel. The Karen who has just visited this country, has sustained his family on four or six dollars a month, while he has been laboring to spread the news of salvation among his countrymen. In several instances, individuals and churches in this country have assumed the charge of supporting some one of these preachers, engaging to pay the requisite sum annually. How many others might be found abundantly able to make this additional effort in the cause of holy benevolence, without one sacrifice of real comfort. Many persons in moderate circumstances might give far more in aid of missionary operations than they have heretofore done, by laying aside at short intervals, a small sum, which at the close of the year will be found to have accumulated to an amount they could not perhaps, without inconvenience, spare at one time. The writer is acquainted with several individuals, some of whom have only limited pecuniary means, who in consequence of hearing Mrs. Wade's appeals, and being desirous of increasing their contributions to the cause to which she is devoted, have pledged themselves to lay aside weekly the sum of twelve and a half cents for the support of a Karen preacher. A few persons can in this way accomplish the object; and who can predict the amount of good which may result? Christian sisters, will you not form little associations on a similar plan, for this or some kindred object; and if others cannot be induced to unite in it, let each one resolve to adopt it herself.

THE VINEYARD.

A PARABLE.

A CERTAIN man, on the settlement of a new territory, purchased an extensive estate; and being about to remove for a considerable time from his possession, directed his servants to clear and to cultivate it. The soil was rich, and capable of very general productiveness; but the will of the owner was, that the attention of his servants should be given to the culture of the vine. He accordingly left them written instructions to cultivate each one a vineyard. For many years this practice was continued by them, up to the very letter of their instructions. But, in process of time, other settlers located themselves around; and intercourse with them became inevitable; the language, and thoughts, and manners of the settlers, became, in a great degree, one. By degrees the spoken language varied, in the meaning of some of its terms, from what was the spoken language when the estate in question was purchased. This was the case with the term 'vineyard.' At first, the vineyard was the only cultivated portion of the territory, and 'vineyard' and 'plantation' were synonymous terms. When other settlers began to cultivate the soil, they, almost necessarily, adopted the language of the first settlers, though their pursuits were different. They all cultivated the soil, and therefore all were said to have vineyards; yet some had only part of their land planted with the vine, or grape, and some with melons, and some with cucumbers, and some even with corn and olives. After a while, the servants of the first settler fell into the adoption of the modes of thought, and habits of speech, of their new neighbors, and honestly supposed that they were doing the will of their master in mingling the culture of the grape with that of the melon and cucumber, and also with that of corn and the olive. After the lapse of a still further period, the culture of the vine fell into very general disuse among them, and was almost entirely abandoned for that of corn and olives. Yet to their corn and olive plantations, they continued to apply the name of vineyard. To one of these servants of the original settler, it occurred, that perhaps the course which had been pursued by the generality of his fellow servants, would not meet the approbation of their master; and he, accordingly, remonstrated with them on the impropriety of their conduct. They thought him unnecessarily scrupulous; and alleged that words were the signs of ideas, and that the word 'vineyard' now signified 'any cultivated portion of land;' and therefore, though the culture of the vine or grape had been neglected, they had yet cultivated each his respective vineyard or plantation of corn, or olives, or melons, or cucumbers, and that the culture of these was not expressly forbidden. They added, moreover, that they did not question his (the remonstrant's) plantation being a vineyard, as, indeed, they could not; for he had nothing under culture but the grape; and they urged on him, most vehemently, not to question that their plantations were 'vineyards' also, though the grape was not one of their productions. He admitted that now the word 'vineyard' did suggest the idea of any cultivated portion of land; because the spoken language of the settlers had become somewhat different from what it originally was: He reminded them that the will of their master was to be sought, not in the meaning they now put upon terms, but in that which was originally attached to them. To ascertain this, he referred them to the written instructions left them by their master; and endeavored to convince them that they did not obey the instructions which were originally given to them; but attached another meaning than their master had attached to the words in which he had expressed his will. In proof of this, he referred them to other portions of the 'instructions;' viz. such as speak of the vintage, the wine vat, and the press, &c. &c. and concluded by saying that he was so convinced of the importance of his master's approbation, that he, at least, was determined to obey him exactly. If it were even the case that the master would own their respective plantations as vineyards, (of which he, the remonstrant, was by no means sure,) he was at least sure that that plantation would be owned by him as a vineyard, where only the grape was cultivated. He concluded, therefore, that whatever risk his fellow servants might choose to run, he, for his part, would cultivate, what not only he, but they also, were SURE WAS A VINEYARD.

Now, reader, though the above is all a parable, it may be made the means of giving valuable instruction on an important portion of revealed truth. By the original settler, in the above parable, is intended, the Lord Jesus Christ; by the servants to whom he committed the culture of his purchased possessions, the apostles and their successors in the ministerial office; by the instructions left on record, to teach them the will of their master respecting the culture they were to bestow on his land, the Scriptures of truth. With these explanations, you will be prepared for the following exhibition of the truth which this parable is designed to teach.

When our Lord was about to be taken from his disciples, to the glory of the heavenly world, he gave them a brief, but important commission. He introduced that commission, with the solemn declaration that he was made Head over all things to the church militant, and triumphant: "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth;" and having thus shown them the basis of authority on which his command rested, he proceeded to the utterance of the command itself: "Go ye, therefore, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

The apostles recognized the authority of Christ, and acted agreeably to their commission; "they went everywhere, preaching the word," and thus "teaching all nations;" those who received their instructions on the fundamental points of their message, were baptized, and then instructed more in detail, "in all things whatsoever the Lord had commanded." Thus the commission of the Lord to the apostles was fulfilled, and that in the precise order of prescription; for we read what was the instruction first communicated in Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost; what course was pursued towards those who received it, viz. "they were baptized," and what was their subsequent course; "they continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine, under the instruction of the apostles," in the discharge of the duties of church members, (i. e. "in breaking of bread,") and in those of private Christians, ("and in prayers.")

Such was the practice of the first regularly organized church of Christ, after his departure from the world; and such continued to be the practice of the church for several ages, at least as far as regards the ordinance of baptism. It was administered to none but professed believers, nor in any other mode than by immersion; and never till it was administered, was the convert received into the fellowship of the church, nor to a participation of the ordinance referred to, in the above quotation, by the expression, "breaking of bread."

The parable may be employed as an appropriate illustration relative to both the mode and subjects of baptism. With respect to the mode of baptism, in these days, we hear of "baptism by immersion," "baptism by sprinkling," and "baptism by affusion, or pouring;" but from the beginning it was not so. There was one leading, prominent signification of the word: and that signification was attached to it when the commission was given: consequently, in the first ages of the church, the recipients of this rite were "buried by baptism." But the question arises, How came any other mode to be adopted? For a full answer to the question, the reader is referred to Robinson's History of Baptism; and here the following brief account must suffice. In the early history of all nations, we find a profusion of figures employed in their language; and it is so in the history of the christian church; where occur figures of speech arising out of the instituted order of things in the Christian church, and some of these figures have relation to baptism. Because that ordinance was not administered till the recipient of it was regenerate, it was called the laver of regeneration; and after a while was still further abbreviated, so as that baptism was called regeneration. Still, however, it was understood as figurative; and no injury was derived to the church by any alteration of the ordinance from the form in which it had been originally delivered to her. But after the lapse of a further period, when the generation who first used the figure in this abbreviated form, had gone to their rest, the language began to be viewed in such a connexion with one portion of divine truth, as to disturb, seriously, the minds of some whose consciences were tender, and whose judgments weak. It is said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." Now "born again" and "regenerated" are terms of similar import; but by a change in the signification of words, "regenerated" had come to signify "baptized," and thus the following interpretation was put upon the passage, "Except a man be baptized, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Now it might sometimes occur that persons in sickness should be converted to God, and baptism would be, to them, impracticable; i. e. immersion would be so. Yet, in the mistaken apprehension of the age, baptism was essential to salvation; in order, therefore, to save the soul, another religious application of water, (sprinkling or pouring,) was substituted for immersion, while yet the name of baptism was applied to it. This other application of water, it is true, was not considered valid baptism in the age in which it was introduced, if the sick person recovered; he was, in that case, required to be baptized, i. e. immersed.

From some such cause as this, the term baptism came to be used for sprinkling or pouring, and after the lapse of years or ages, the error became so venerable, that the name which was at first given by complaisance to sprinkling or pouring, in process of time, was claimed for it, and such religious application of water was declared to be baptism.

The Baptists, indeed, like the servant in the parable, remonstrate with their fellow servants or fellow Christians in relation to the subject, and express their doubts as to the propriety of their conduct, and its accordance with their Lord's will. They are thought, as he was, to be unnecessarily scrupulous; and are told that baptism now signifies any religious application of water, in the name of the Trinity; and that, therefore, though immersion is neglected by all other denominations, yet each and all of them practise baptism, though some do it by sprinkling, and some by pouring, and some use both of these, and add immersion to them. It is, indeed, conceded to the Baptists by their fellow Christians of other denominations, that their practice, immersion, is baptism; for this cannot be denied; but they are urged not to question that pouring or sprinkling is baptism also, though plainly neither of them is immersion. In reply, they admit that now the word baptism is used for any application of water; because in this word our spoken language is different in signification from that of the first Christians; but they contend, as their representative in the parable did, that the meaning our Lord attached to the word is to be learned, not from the sense now attached to it, but from that which was originally conveyed by it. To ascertain this, they refer to other portions of the sacred volume, which have relation to the same subject; to such as refer to "going down into," and "coming up out of the water," "being buried by baptism;" a place being chosen where "there was much water;" its being compared to the deluge, which drowned the old world, &c. They profess not to have any right to force their own opinions on the acceptance of their fellow Christians; but only urge them to search the scriptures on the subject. They attach so much importance to the full and unreserved approbation of their Lord, that, though they will not, and dare not question the sincerity of their fellow Christians who differ from them on the subject of baptism, they feel that they must observe the ordinances "as they were delivered;" and whether others are to be considered as baptized or unbaptized, their course must be such as that there be no question whether they are baptized.

As it regards the subjects of baptism. It is no less clear that, originally, this ordinance was administered to none but believers, than that it was administered in no other mode than immersion. The commission required the apostles first, to teach; secondly, to baptize those who were taught; and thirdly, to carry on the work of instruction so as to embrace ALL THINGS whatsoever their Lord had commanded them.

Now it is obvious that in order to persons being taught, they must have arrived at an age when they can receive ideas, and therefore must have advanced beyond the period of infancy. Nor can this be invalidated by any reference to baptism of households; for in the cases of all baptized households, it is asserted of them, that they did or enjoyed what is impossible to infants, viz. "addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints," "believed," "rejoiced," "were comforted," &c.* Again, repentance and faith were uniformly required of such as received the word, prior to their admission to the ordinance of baptism; and its absence would have been considered a sufficient reason for refusing that ordinance to an applicant. "If thou believest thou mayest," plainly implies, "unless thou believest, thou mayest not." Now as infants not only do not, but cannot believe, they may not be admitted to the ordinance. It is useless and irrelevant to talk of the faith of parents or sponsors; the requirement of personal repentance, &c. excludes it. "Repent and be baptized each one (ἕκαστος ὑμῶν) of you," is the command, and one which infants cannot obey.

Here also, as in the former case, a question arises. How came the ordinance, which was evidently designed only for believers, to be administered to infants, to whom faith is impossible? In answer to this inquiry, it is only necessary to recur to what was before said of the use of figurative language in relation to the ordinance of baptism. Sickness was not confined to unbaptized adults; but infants, also, were often sick, and sometimes died. Now the interpretation which had been put on John iii. 3, 5, in consequence of the words "baptism" and "regeneration" having become almost convertible terms, led many to fear for the safety of the souls of such infants. Parental tenderness endeavored to provide for the safety of such as should die in infancy, and therefore infants in health were immersed that they might enter the kingdom of heaven, and infants in sickness were treated as adults in similar circumstances, i. e. sprinkled. Now to this practice, Baptists, like their representative in the parable, object. They allege that baptism is the door of entrance into the church, and that none are now to be permitted to pass it, but such as originally did so; i. e. subjects of personal repentance and faith. They appeal to the "book of instructions," and show, not only that baptism was to be administered to such only as believed; but that those to whom it was administered were "to observe all things whatsoever the Lord commanded,"—and among them the Lord's supper. They contend, therefore, that either baptism should not be administered to infants, or that these infants should commune at the Lord's table; but as the latter is not practised by any denomination, so the former should not be practised.

* 1 Cor. xvi. 15. Acts xvi. 34, 40.

Their fellow Christians allege, in reply, that infants are not forbidden to be baptized, and therefore it cannot be improper to administer it to them. To this the Baptists reply, "But who hath required this at your hand?" for if not required, it will not be accepted. May we substitute water for wine, in the Lord's supper? Yet this is not forbidden. Is not the argument as strong for its introduction, as for the admission of infants for baptism?

Finally, it is admitted that, in the first age of the Christian church, baptism was administered only to such as professed personal repentance and faith; this was the "one baptism" of the primitive church; and as the "book of instructions" requires us to "keep the ordinances as they were delivered to us," we are not at liberty to alter them.

In conclusion, dear reader, bear in mind your relation to the Lord of the vineyard. In the first place, see to it that you are found working in it; that you are a partaker of real vital godliness; that you are renewed in spirit by the agency of the Holy Spirit, and pardoned through the blood of Jesus Christ. Having ascertained these points, for your future and farther instruction, betake yourself to the Scriptures of truth; and yield implicit obedience to their directions. Ascertain from them what kind of churches the apostles planted, and join yourself to such a church. See if any except baptized believers, were associated in church fellowship; if any communed at the Lord's table who were not baptized, i. e. immersed; if any were baptized, except upon profession of personal repentance and personal faith; and having seen these things in the light of revelation, beware how you follow the sparks which human wisdom or human authority have kindled. The Lord given you his instructions, and has commanded you "to keep the ordinances as they were delivered:" his second coming draweth nigh, and then "happy shall that servant be, who is found so DOING."

VINDICATION

OF

THE BAPTISTS

FROM THE CHARGE OF BIGOTRY,

IN REFUSING

COMMUNION AT THE LORD'S TABLE TO PÆDOBAPTISTS.

BY ABRAHAM BOOTH.

ABRIDGED.

There is—one Baptism.

They who are not rightly baptiz'd, are, doubtless, not baptized at all.

No unbaptized person communicates at the Lord's Table.

EPHES. IV. v.

TERTULLIAN.

THEOPHYLACT.

PREFACE.

It was not a fondness for controversy, but a desire to vindicate the honor of Christ, as lawgiver in his own kingdom; to assert the scriptural importance of a positive institution in the house of God; and to exculpate himself, together with a great majority of his brethren of the Baptist persuasion, from charges of an odious kind, that excited the author to compose and publish the following pages. If these designs be answered, the writer obtains his end; and if not, he has the testimony of his own conscience to the uprightness of his intentions.

As we are expressly commanded to “contend earnestly for the Faith once delivered to the saints;” it can hardly be questioned, whether a sincere concern for the purity and permanence of our Lord’s appointments in the gospel church, be not an indispensable duty. For they are no less the expressions of his dominion over us, than of his love to us; no less intended as means of his own glory, than of our happiness. The subject, therefore, that is here presented to the reader’s notice, though not of the greatest, yet is far from being of small importance in the Christian religion.

It is entirely on the defensive that the author takes up his pen; for had not the principles and practice of Baptists been severely censured, these pages would never have seen the light.

That He who is King in Zion may reign in the hearts and regulate the worship of all his professing people; that the Spirit of wisdom, of holiness, and of peace, may dwell in all the churches of Christ; and that the same divine Agent may direct the reader’s inquiries after truth, engage his affections in the performance of duty, and enable him to “walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless;” is the sincere desire and fervent prayer of his willing servant in the gospel of Christ,

A. BOOTH.

GOODMAN’S FIELDS, }
MARCH 3, 1778. }

CONTENTS.

SECTION I.

	PAGE
Baptists not chargeable with laying an unwarrantable Stress on the Ordinance of Baptism,	3

SECTION II.

The general grounds on which we proceed, in refusing communion at the Lord's Table, to Pædobaptist Believers. Novelty of the Sentiment and Practice of those who plead for Free Communion: and the Inconsistency of such a conduct with Baptist Principles,	16
---	----

SECTION III.

Arguments against Free Communion at the Lord's Table,	24
---	----

SECTION IV.

Several passages of Scripture considered, which are produced in favor of Free Communion,	46
--	----

SECTION V.

The Temper required of Christians towards one another, not contrary to our practice—our conduct freed from the charge of Inconsistency—no reason to exalt the Lord's Supper, in point of Importance, as greatly superior to the Ordinance of Baptism,	51
---	----

SECTION VI.

Reflections,	71
--------------	----

BOOTH'S

VINDICATION OF THE BAPTISTS.

SECTION I.

Baptists not chargeable with laying an unwarrantable Stress on the Ordinance of Baptism.

MANY reflections are cast on the Baptists, and various charges are laid against them; of such a kind, as greatly impeach the truth of their doctrinal principles, and the candor of their Christian temper. They are frequently represented as uncharitably rigid, as incorrigible bigots to a favorite opinion, and as putting baptism in the place of our Lord's atonement blood and the sanctifying agency of the Divine Spirit.

But why such unfriendly surmises and bold accusations? What is there in our principles or conduct, to authorize such hard suspicions, and such severity of censure? As to making baptism a substitute for the atonement of Jesus Christ, and the sanctifying agency of the Holy Spirit, it is manifestly contrary to our avowed sentiments; so contrary, that all the world, one would have thought, must agree to acquit us of such a charge. For it is too notorious to admit a plea of ignorance in any of our opponents, that we consider no one as a proper subject of that institution, who does not profess repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; who does not, in other words, appear to be in a state of salvation. Nay, so far from making baptism a saving ordinance, we do not, we cannot consider any one as a proper subject of it, who looks upon it in that light.

Yet were an imputation of this kind as just as it is groundless; did we really ascribe a regenerating efficacy and saving effects to that sacred appointment; we should hardly forbear concluding, that these complaints and charges come with an ill grace from brethren, especially from the ministry, who declare their assent to all that is contained in the book of Common Prayer. For they, immediately after baptizing an infant, address first the people, and then the omniscient God, in the following remarkable words: 'Seeing, dearly beloved brethren, that this child is REGENERATE and grafted into the body of Christ's church, let us give thanks to Almighty God for these benefits—We yield thee hearty thanks, most merciful Father, that it hath pleased thee to REGENERATE this infant with thy holy spirit, to receive him for THINE OWN CHILD by adoption, and to incorporate him into thy holy church.'—Thus the clergy most solemnly profess to believe, when they administer baptism to infants. When giving catechetical instructions to children, they inculcate on their tender minds the same things, as truths and facts of great importance. For thus they interrogate each young catechumen, and thus they teach him to answer. 'Who gave you this name? My godfathers and godmothers in my baptism, WHEREIN I WAS MADE a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven. How many sacraments hath Christ ordained in his Church? Two only, as GENERALLY NECESSARY TO SALVATION, that is to say, baptism and the supper of the Lord. What is the inward and spiritual grace? (i. e. of baptism.) A death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness; for, being by nature born in sin, and the children of wrath, we are HEREBY MADE the children of grace.* Thus children are taught by the parish minister; and in the firm persuasion of those things they are confirmed by the bishop. For, immediately before he lays upon them his episcopal hand, he recognizes, in a solemn address to God, the great blessings supposed to be conferred and received by them at the time of their baptism. Thus he prays: 'Almighty and ever living God, who hast vouchsafed TO REGENERATE THESE THY SERVANTS by water and the

* See the office for public baptism of infants, and the catechism. Whether the doctrine here advanced be consistent with the sentiments of Pædobaptists in general, or calculated to instruct the ignorant and edify believers, I must leave the reader to judge

Holy Ghost, and hast given unto them FORGIVENESS OF ALL THEIR SINS.'—And, after imposition of hands; 'We make our humble supplications unto thee [the divine Majesty] for these thy servants, upon whom (after the example of thy holy apostles) we have now laid our hands to CERTIFY THEM (by this sign) OF THY FAVOR AND GRACIOUS GOODNESS TOWARDS THEM.' Once more; as the church of England suggests a painful doubt, relating to the final happiness of such infants as die without baptism; so she absolutely forbids her Burial Service to be read over any who die unbaptized; placing them, in this respect, on a level with those that die under a sentence of excommunication for the most enormous crimes, or are guilty of suicide. For thus she instructs her members, and thus she directs her ministers: 'It is certain by God's word, that children which are baptized, dying before they commit actual sin, are undoubtedly saved—Here it is to be NOTED, that the office ensuing [i. e. the burial office] is not to be used for any that die UNBAPTIZED, OR EXCOMMUNICATE, OR HAVE LAID VIOLENT HANDS UPON THEMSELVES.*' Nay, so confident is the British National Church of these things being agreeable to the word of God, that she boldly pronounces the following sentence on all who dare to call them in question:—'Whosoever shall hereafter affirm, that the form of God's worship contained in the book of Common Prayer, and administration of the sacraments, containeth any thing in it that is repugnant to the scriptures, let him be excommunicated, and not restored but by the bishop of the place, or archbishop, after his repentance and public revocation of such his wicked errors.†' Thus were we really chargeable with representing baptism as a saving ordinance, our Episcopal brethren could not consistently lodge a complaint against us on that account.

If we consult the writings of the most eminent

* Order for Confirmation, at the conclusion of the office for public baptism of infants, and Rubric prefixed to order for burial of the dead.

† Constitutions and Cannons, No. IV.—Similar to this, is that anathematizing decree established by the Council of Trent. Seff. VII. Can. V. If any one shall assert, that baptism is free, or not necessary to salvation let him be accursed preachers among the Methodists, we shall find, that their sentiments harmonize with the doctrine of the National Church, in regard to the efficacy and absolute necessity of baptism. The late pious and extensively useful Mr. George Whitefield thus expresses his views of the subjects before us:—‘Does not this verse [John iii. 5.] urge the absolute necessity of water baptism? Yes, when it may be had; but how God will deal with persons unbaptized we cannot tell. What have we to do to judge those that are without?’* Had our Methodist brethren met with language and sentiment like these in any of our publications, they would, undoubtedly, have thought themselves warranted in using their utmost efforts to expose the dangerous error, and to guard their hearers against us, as making a Saviour of baptism. But while some of them, have solemnly professed their cordial consent to the various articles contained in the book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments, and while they all unite in revering the character of the late Mr. Whitefield, they could not be either candid or consistent in condemning us, were we really chargeable with representing baptism as necessary to salvation.

Mr. John Wesley, enumerating the benefits we receive by being baptized, speaks in the following language:—‘By baptism we enter into covenant with God, into that everlasting covenant, which he hath commanded forever. By baptism we are admitted into the church, and consequently made members of Christ, its head.—By baptism we, who were by nature children of wrath, are made the children of God. And this regeneration is more than barely being admitted into the church.—By water, then, as a means, the water of baptism, we are regenerated or born again. Baptism doth now save us, if we live answerable thereto; if we repent, believe, and obey the gospel. Supposing this, as it admits us into the church here, so into glory hereafter.—If infants are guilty of original sin, in the ordinary way, they cannot be saved, unless this be washed away by baptism.’† So Mr. Wesley teaches; so, says a learned cardinal, the church has always believed; and the Council of Trent confirms the whole. In the firm persuasion of this doctrine, Mr. Wesley is also desirous of settling the members of his very numerous societies. For these positions are contained in a book, professedly intended to preserve the reader from unsettled notions in religion. Now, as I cannot suppose this author imagines, with Dodwell, that infants who die without baptism, are not immortal; I know not whether he choseth to lodge them in the limbus puerorum of the Papists;* or whether, with Austin, he consigns them over to eternal Damnation, though the one or the other must be the case. For, that millions die without baptism, is an undoubted fact, and that God in favor of such, should be frequently departing from the ordinary method of his divine procedure, much oftener departing from, than acting according to it, is hard to conceive; is absolutely incredible, as it involves a contradiction. Yet, on Mr. Wesley's principles, it must be so, if the generality of those that have died, since baptism was instituted, be not excluded the kingdom of heaven. For he who considers what multitudes of Jews and Heathens have peopled the earth, ever since the Christian dispensation commenced; what an extensive spread Mahomet's imposture has had for more than eleven hundred years; and what numbers of infants die without baptism, even in Christian countries, cannot but conclude, even admitting Pædobaptism to have been practised by the apostles, that a vast majority of deceased infants have left the world without being baptized. Now who could suppose an author and a preacher, that asserts the efficacy and exalts the importance of baptism at this extravagant rate, should charge the Baptists with placing an unlawful dependance on that ordinance? Yet, that he has frequently done so, in his pulpit discourses, if not in his numerous publications, is beyond a doubt; is known to thousands!

* Works, Vol. iv. p. 355—6.

† Preservative, p. 146—150.

We are not conscious of attributing any degree of importance to baptism, which our Pædobaptist dissenting brethren do not allow, and for which they do not plead. Do we consider it as a divine appointment, as an institution of Christ, the administration and use of which are to continue to the end of the world? So do they. Do they consider it as an ordinance which, when once rightly administered to a proper subject is never to be repeated? So do we. Do we look upon it as indispensably necessary to communion at the Lord's table? So do they. Do we actually refuse communion to such whom we consider as unbaptized? So do they. No man, considered by them as not baptized, would be admitted to break bread at the Lord's table, in any of their churches; however amiable his character, or how much soever they might esteem him in other respects.

* Forbesii Instruct. Hist. Theolog. p. 493.

Nor is this a new opinion, or a novel practice: for such has been the sentiment and such the conduct of the Christian church in every age. Before the grand Romish apostacy, in the very depth of that apostacy, and since the Reformation, both at home and abroad; the general practice has been, to receive none but baptized persons to communion at the Lord's table. The following quotations from ancient and modern writers, relating to this point, may not be improper. Justin Martyr, for instance, when speaking of the Lord's supper, says; 'This food is called by us the Eucharist; of which it is not lawful for any to partake, but such as believe the things that are taught by us to be true, and have been baptized.'*—Jerom; 'Catechumens cannot communicate;' i. e. at the Lord's table, they being unbaptized.†—Austin, when asserting the absolute necessity of infants receiving the Lord's supper, says; 'of which, certainly, they cannot partake unless they be baptized.'‡—Bede informs us, that three young princes among the eastern Saxons, seeing a bishop administer the sacred supper, desired to partake of it, as their deceased and royal father had done. To whom the bishop answered; 'If ye will be washed, or baptized, in the salutary fountain, as your father was, ye may also partake of the Lord's supper, as he did, but if ye despise the former, ye cannot in any wise receive the latter.' They replied, 'we will not enter into the fountain, or be baptized; nor have we any need of it; but yet we desire to be refreshed with that bread.' After which the historian tells us, that they importunately requesting, and the bishop resolutely refusing them admission to the holy table, they were so exasperated, as to *banish both him and his out of their kingdom.—Theophylact; 'No unbaptized person partakes of the Lord's supper.'—Bonaventure; 'Faith, indeed, is necessary to all the sacraments, but especially to the reception of baptism: because baptism is the first among the sacraments, and the door of the sacraments.'†

* Apolog. II. p. 162. Apud Suicerum, Thes. Ecclesi. Tom. II. col. 1135.

† Catechumeni—communicare non possunt. In cap. VI. Epist. II. ad Corinth

‡ Quod nisi baptizati non utique possunt. Epis. ad Bonifacium, Epist. CVI.

Quotations of this kind might be greatly multiplied: but that none were admitted to the sacred supper in the first ages of the Christian church, before they were baptized, we are assured by various learned writers, well versed in ecclesiastical antiquity. For instance: Frid. Spanheimius asserts, 'That none but baptized persons were admitted to the Lord's table.'‡ Lord Chancellor King; 'Baptism was always precedent to the Lord's supper; and none were admitted to receive the Eucharist, till they were baptized. This is so obvious to every man, that it needs no proof.'§—Dr. Wall; 'no church ever gave the communion to any persons before they were baptized—Among all the absurdities that ever were held, none ever maintained that, that any person should partake of the communion before he was baptized.'||—Dr. Doddridge; 'It is certain that Christians in general have always been spoken of, by the most ancient fathers, as baptized persons:—and it is also certain, that as far as our

* Hist. Eccles. Lib. II. Cap. V. p. 63.

† Apud Forbesium, Instruct. Historic. Theolog. lib. X. cap. IV. § 9.

‡ Subjecta ad eucharistiam admissa, soli baptizati. Hist. Christian col. 622.

§ Enquiry, Part II. p. 44.

|| Hist. Infant Bap. Part II. chap. ix.

knowledge of primitive antiquity reaches, no unbaptized person received the Lord's supper.*

That the Protestant churches in general have always agreed in the same sentiment and conduct, is equally evident. Out of many eminent writers that might be mentioned, the following quotations may suffice. Ursinus, asserts; 'That they who are not yet baptized, should not be admitted to the sacred supper.'†—Ravenellius, speaking of the Lord's supper, says; 'Baptism ought to precede; nor is the holy supper to be administered to any, except they be baptized.'‡—Zanchius; 'We believe that baptism, as a sacrament appointed by Christ, is absolutely necessary in the church.'§—Hoornebeekius; 'No one is admitted to the sacred supper, unless he is baptized.'||—Turretinus; 'It is one thing to have a right to those external ordinances of the church, which belong to a profession; and it is another to be interested in the internal blessings of faith. Unbaptized believers have actually a right to these, because they are already partakers of Christ and his benefits: though they have not yet a right to those, except in observing the appointed order, by baptism.'¶—Leydecker; 'Baptism is necessary, not only in a way of expediency, but by virtue of a divine precept. They therefore who reject it, reject the counsel of God against themselves.'—Benedict. Pictetus; 'The supper of our Lord ought not to be administered to persons that are unbaptized: for before baptism, men are not considered as members of the visible church.'††—Marcius; 'The dying, and the unbaptized, are not to be admitted to communion.'‡‡—Mr. Baxter; 'If any should be so impudent as to say, it is not the meaning of Christ, that baptizing should immediately, without delay, follow discipling, they are confuted by

* Lectures. p. 511.

† Nondum baptizati, ad coenam non sunt admittendi. Corp. Doct. Christ. p. 566

‡ Bibliotheca Sacra, Tom. I. p. 301. § Opera. Tom. VIII. col. 516.

|| Socin. Confut. Tom. III. p. 416.

¶ Institut. Theolog. Tom. III. Loc. XVIII. Quæst. IV. § 10.

 Idea Theolog. p. 225. †† Theolog. Christiana p. 959, 960.

‡‡ Christ. Theolog. Medulla, p. 406.

the constant example of Scripture. So that I dare say, that this will be out of doubt with all rational, considerate, impartial Christians.*—Once more: Dr. Doddridge thus expresses his views of the subject. ‘The law of Christ requires that all who believe the gospel should be baptized—For any to abstain from baptism, when he knows it is an institution of Christ, and that it is the will of Christ that he should subject himself to it, is such an act of disobedience to his authority, as is inconsistent with true faith—How excellent soever any man’s character is, he must be baptized before he can be looked upon as completely a member of the church of Christ.’†

Perfectly conformable to these testimonies, are the Catechisms and Confessions of faith, that have been published at any time, or by any denomination of Christians: for if the positive institutions of Christ be not entirely omitted, baptism is not only always mentioned first, but generally mentioned in such a way, as intimates that it is a prerequisite to the Lord’s table. And so, even in our common forms of speaking, if we have occasion to mention both these solemn appointments of our Lord, baptism still has the priority. Thus generally, thus universally, is it allowed, that baptism is necessary to communion at the Lord’s table. Nay, many of our Pædobaptist brethren consider the ordinance in a more important light than we. For they frequently represent it, as a seal of the covenant of grace; as a mean of bringing their infant offspring into covenant with God; and some of them severely censure us, for leaving our children to the uncovenanted mercies of the Most High, merely because we do not baptize them. Expressions and sentiments these, which we neither adopt nor approve; because they seem to attribute more to the ordinance, than the sacred scriptures, in our opinion, will warrant.

It appears, then, to be a fact, a stubborn, incontestible fact, that our judgment and conduct, relating to the necessity of baptism in order to communion, perfectly coincide with the sentiments and practice of all Pædobaptist churches. Nor have I heard of any such church now upon earth, with which we do not, in this respect, agree; for none, of whom I have any intelligence, be their sentiments or modes of worship whatever they may, in regard to other things, admit any to the sacred supper, who have not, in their opinion, been baptized. And, on the other hand, when the importance of baptism comes under consideration between us and them, it is manifest, that Pædobaptists in general, ascribe more to it than we, and place a greater dependence upon it. Consequently, neither candor, nor reason, nor justice, will admit that we should be charged, as we have frequently been, with laying an unwarrantable stress upon it.

* Plain Scripture Proof, p. 126.

† Lectures, p. 508, 512. Discourses on Regen. Postscript to pref. p. 12, 13

The point controverted between us and our Pædobaptist brethren, is not, Whether unbaptized believers may, according to the laws of Christ, be admitted to communion: for here we have no dispute; but, What is baptism, and who are the proper subjects of it? In the discussion of these questions there is, indeed, a wide and a very material difference; but in regard to the former we are entirely agreed. Why, then, do our brethren censure us as uncharitably rigid, and incorrigible bigots? The principal reason seems to be this: They, in general, admit, that immersion in the name of the triune God, on a profession of faith in Jesus Christ, is baptism, real baptism; while our fixed and avowed persuasion will not permit us to allow, that infant sprinkling,* though performed with the greatest solemnity, is worthy of the name. Consequently, though they, consistently with their own principles, may receive us to communion among them, yet we cannot admit them to fellowship with us at the Lord's table, without contradicting our professed sentiments. For it appears to us, on the most deliberate inquiry, that immersion is not a mere circumstance, or a mode of baptism, but essential to the ordinance: so that, in our judgment, he who is not immersed, is not baptized. This is the principle on which we proceed, in refusing communion to our Pædobaptist brethren, whom, in other respects, we highly esteem, and towards whom we think it our duty to cultivate the most cordial affection. Nor can we suppose but they would act a similar part, were they in our situation. Were they fully persuaded, for instance, that the great Head of the church had not commanded, nor in any way authorized his ministering servants to require a profession of faith prior to baptism; and were they equally certain that the ordinance never was administered by the apostles to any but infants, nor in any other way than that of aspersion or pouring, would they not look upon the immersion of professing believers, as a quite different thing from baptism? And, were this the case, would they not consider us as unbaptized, and refuse to have communion with us on that account? I am persuaded they would, notwithstanding their affection for any of us, as believers in Jesus Christ. Consequently, if we be really culpable in the eyes of our brethren, it is for denying the validity of infant baptism; not because we refuse communion to Pædobaptists—for an error in our judgment, which misleads the conscience; not for perverseness of temper, or a want of love to the disciples of Christ.

* The reader is desired to observe, that when I make use of the phrase infant sprinkling, or any expression of a similar import, it is merely by way of distinction—without annexing any secondary, or obnoxious idea to it.

The Lord's supper was not appointed to be a test of brotherly love among the people of God; though several objections that are made against us seem to proceed on that supposition. It must be allowed, that as it is a sacred feast and an ordinance of divine worship, mutual Christian affection among communicants at the same table, is very becoming and highly necessary, and so it is in all other branches of social religion. But that sitting down at the holy supper should be considered as the criterion of my love to individuals, or to any Christian community, does not appear from the word of God. The supper of our Lord was designed for other and greater purposes. It was intended to teach and exhibit the most interesting of all truths, and the most wonderful of all transactions. The design of the Great Inceptor was, that it should be a memorial of God's love to us, and of Immanuel's death for us: that, the most astonishing favor ever displayed; this, the most stupendous fact that angels ever beheld. Yes, the love of God, in giving his dear, his only Son; and the death of Christ, as our divine substitute and propitiatory sacrifice, are the grand objects we are called to contemplate at the Lord's table.

As to a proof, a substantial proof of our love to the children of God, it is not given at so cheap and easy a rate, as that of sitting down with them, either occasionally or stately, at the holy table. Numbers do that, who are very far from loving the disciples of Christ, for the truth's sake. To give real evidence of that heavenly affection, there must be the exercise of such tempers, and the performance of such actions, as require much self-denial; and without which, were we to commune with them ever so often, or talk ever so loudly of candor and a catholic spirit,—we should, after all, be destitute of that charity, without which we are "nothing." The reader, therefore, will do well to remember, that the true test of love to the disciples of Christ, is not a submission to any particular ordinance of public worship; for that is rather an evidence of his love to God and reverence for his authority; but sympathizing with them in their afflictions; feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and taking pleasure in doing them good, whatever their necessities may be. For this I have the authority of our final Judge, who will say to his people, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, for"—what? Ye have manifested your love to the saints and your faith in me, by holding free communion at my table with believers of all denominations? No such thing. But, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

Our opponents often insinuate, that we are more zealous to establish a favorite mode, and make proselytes to our own opinion and party, than to promote the honor of Jesus Christ and the happiness of immortal souls. Were this the case, we should, indeed, be much to blame, and greatly disgrace our Christian character. 'But why are the Baptists to be thus represented? Do they affirm that the kingdom of Christ is confined to them? that they only have the true religion among them? and that, unless men are of their party, they will not be saved? Do they wish success to none that are employed in the vineyard, but themselves? or say of others, engaged in the same common cause, Master, forbid them, because they follow not with us? On the contrary, do they not profess a warm esteem and affection for all those, of whatever communion, who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and aim to promote his cause in the world? and do they not give proof of this, by holding a friendly correspondence with them as opportunities offer; and by cordially joining them in occasional exercises of public worship? It is not the distinguishing tenet of baptism, how much soever they wish it to prevail, that is the main band that knits them in affection to one another; it is the infinitely nobler consideration of the relation they stand in to Christ as his disciples. They hope, therefore, to be believed when they declare, that they most cordially embrace in the arms of Christian love the friends of Jesus who differ from them in this point; and to be further believed when they add, that they hold the temper and conduct of the furious zealot for baptism, who fails in his allegiance to Christ, and in the charity he owes his fellow Christians, in sovereign contempt.'*

My reader will not here expect a discussion of the mode and subject of Baptism; for it is not that ordinance considered in itself, or as detached from other appointments of Jesus Christ; but the order in which it is placed, and the connexion in which it stands with the Lord's supper, that are the subject of our inquiry.

* Dr. Stennett's Answer to Mr. Addington, Part II. p. 284, 285.

SECTION II

The general grounds on which we refuse Communion at the Lord's table, to Pædobaptist believers—Novelty of the Sentiment and Practice of those who plead for Free Communion: and the Inconsistency of such a Conduct with Baptist Principles.

THE following positions are so evidently true, that they will not be disputed :

Our divine Lord, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, is perfectly well qualified to judge what ordinances are proper to be appointed, and what measures are necessary to be pursued, in order to obtain the great design of religion among mankind. Being head over all things to the church, he possesses the highest authority to appoint ordinances of divine worship, and to enact laws for the government of his house, which appointments and laws must bind the subjects of his government in the strictest manner. Having loved the church to the most astonishing degree, even so as to give himself a ransom for her; he must be considered as having made the wisest and the best appointments, as having given the most salutary and perfect laws, with a view to promote her happiness, and as means of his own glory. These laws and ordinances are committed to writing and contained in the Bible; which heavenly volume is the rule of our faith and practice, in things pertaining to religion; our complete and only rule, in all things relating to the instituted worship of God and the order of his house. So that we should receive nothing as an article of our creed, which is not contained in it: do nothing as a part of divine worship, not commanded by it; neither omit nor alter any thing that has the sanction of our Lord's appointment. Nor have we any reason to expect, that our divine Lawgiver and sovereign Judge will accept our solemn services, any further than we follow those directions which he has given, without addition, alteration, or diminution. "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it;” were the injunctions of Jehovah to the ancient Israelitish church. “Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you;” is the requisition of Jesus Christ to all his ministering servants.*

In the worship of God there cannot be either obedience or faith, unless we regard the divine appointments. Not obedience; for that supposes a precept, or what is equivalent to it. Not faith; for that requires a promise, or some divine declaration. If then, we act without a command, we have reason to apprehend that God will say to us, as he did to Israel of old, “Who hath required this at your hand?” And, on the contrary, when our divine Sovereign enjoins the performance of any duty, to deliberate is disloyalty; to dispute is rebellion.—‘Believers, who really attend to communion with Jesus Christ,’ says a judicious author, ‘do labor to keep their hearts chaste to him in his ordinances, institutions, and worship. They will receive nothing, practise nothing, own nothing in his worship, but what is of his appointment. They know that from the foundation of the world he never did allow, nor ever will, that in any thing the will of the creature should be the measure of his honor, or the principle of his worship, either as to matter or manner. It was a witty and true sense that one gave of the second commandment; ‘Non imago, non simulachrum prohibetur; sed non facies tibi. It is a making to ourselves, an inventing, a finding out ways of worship or means of honoring God, not by him appointed, that is so severely forbidden.’†—‘To serve God otherwise than he requireth,’ says another learned writer, ‘is not to worship, but to rob and mock him. In God’s service, it is a greater sin to do that which we are not to do, than not to do that which we are commanded. This is but a sin of omission; but that a sin of sacrilege and high contempt. In this we charge the law only with difficulty; but in that with folly. In this we discover our weakness to do the will, but in that we declare our impudence and arrogancy to control the wisdom of God. In this we acknowledge our own insufficiency; in that we deny the all-sufficiency and plenitude of God's own law. We see the absurdity and wickedness of will-worship, when the same man who is to perform the obedience, shall dare to appoint the laws; implying a peremptory purpose of no further observance than may consist with the allowance of his own judgment. Whereas true obedience must be grounded on the majesty of the power that commands; not on the judgment of the subject, as to the benefit of the precept imposed. Divine laws require obedience, not so much from the quality of the things commanded as from the authority of him that institutes them.*

* Deut. xii. 32. Matt. xxviii. 20.—Smith’s compendious Account of the Form and Order of the Church, p. 15, 16.

† Dr. Owen on Communion with God, p. 170.

That the gospel should be preached to all nations for the obedience of faith; and that, under certain restrictions, they who receive the truth, should be formed into a church state, few can doubt. It is equally clear from the foregoing positions, that it belongs to the supreme prerogative of Jesus Christ, to appoint the terms and conditions on which his people shall have a place in his house and a seat at his table. For we cannot suppose with any appearance of reason, that these conditions are arbitrary; or such as every distinct community may think fit to impose. No; a gospel church has no more power to fix the terms of communion, or to set aside those prescribed by Jesus Christ, than to make a rule of faith, or to settle ordinances of divine worship. This is one characteristic of a church, as distinguished from a civil society; the terms of admission into the latter are discretionary, provided they do not interfere with any divine law; but those of the former are fixed by him who is King in Zion. No congregation of religious professors, therefore, has any authority to make the door of admission into their communion, either straiter, or wider, than Christ himself has made it. †

* Bp. Reynolds's Works, p. 163, 422.

† Dr. Ridgley's Body of Divinity, p. 343, Glasgow edit.

—‘The original form of this house, [i. e. the church of Christ] was not precarious and uncertain; to be altered, and changed, and broke in upon by man, or by any set of men at pleasure. This would reflect on the wisdom and care, as well as on the steadiness of Christ; who is in his house, as well as in the highest heavens, the steady and the faithful Jesus; the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and not in the least given to change; but its form is fixed, particularly in the New Testament. Had Moses or any of the elders of Israel, so much power over the tabernacle as to alter or change a pin thereof? and with what face can man pretend to a power to model and alter at pleasure, gospel churches? As if Christ, the true Moses, had forgot, or neglected, to leave with us the pattern of the house.’*

Baptism and the Lord’s supper are positive appointments in the Christian church, about which we cannot know any thing, relating to their mode of administration, subject or design, except from the revealed will of their great Institutor. For, as a learned writer observes, “All positive duties, or duties made such by institution alone, depend entirely upon the will and declaration of the person, who institutes and ordains them, with respect to the real design and end of them; and consequently, to the due manner of performing them.” It behoves us, therefore, well to consider the rule which our Lord has given relating to these ordinances. ‘Because we can have no other direction in this sort of duties; unless we will have recourse to mere invention, which makes them our own institutions, and not the institutions of those who first appointed them.’†

That there is a connexion between the two positive institutions of the New Testament, is manifest from the word of God; and that one of them must be prior to the other, in order of administration, is evident from the nature of things: for a person cannot be baptized and receive the sacred supper at the same instant. Here, then, the question is, (if any doubt may be moved on a point so evident, without affronting common sense) which of them has the previous claim on a real convert's obedience? Baptism or the Lord's Supper? If we appeal to the persuasion and practice of Christians in all nations and in every age, it will clearly appear, that the former was universally considered, by the churches of Christ,* as a divinely appointed prerequisite for fellowship in the latter, till about the middle of the last century, when some few of the Baptists in England began practically to deny it, by defending and practising mixed communion. A sentiment so peculiar, and a conduct so uncommon as their's are in regard to this institution, require to be well supported by the testimony of the Holy Ghost. For were all the Christian churches now in the world asked, except those few that plead for free communion, whether they thought it lawful to admit unbaptized believers to fellowship at the Lord's table; there is reason to conclude they would readily unite in that declaration of Paul; "We have no such custom, neither the churches of God" that were before us. Yes, considering the novelty of their sentiment and conduct, and what a contradiction they are to the faith and order of the whole Christian Church;—considering that it never was disputed, so far as I can learn, prior to the sixteenth century, by orthodox or heterodox, by Papists or Protestants, whether unbaptized believers should be admitted to the Lord's table; they all agreeing in the contrary practice, however much they differed in matters of equal importance; it may be reasonably expected, and is by us justly demanded, that the rectitude of their conduct who admit unbaptized persons to the supper should be proved, really proved from the records of inspiration. A man may easily show his fondness for novelty, and the deference he pays to his own understanding, by boldly controverting the opinions, and resolutely opposing the practice, of the wisest and the best of men in every age; but, if he would avoid the imputation of arrogance, he must demonstrate that the things he opposes are vulgar errors, which have nothing to recommend them but great antiquity and general custom. Our persuasion, therefore, concerning the necessity of baptism as a term of communion, having had the sanction of universal belief and universal practice for almost sixteen hundred years, it lies on our brethren to prove that it is false and unscriptural; and to shew, from the New Testament, that theirs has the stamp of divine authority.

* Mr. Bragge, on Church Discipline, p. 9. † Bp. Hoadley’s Plain Account, p. 3

* That there were people of different denominations in the second and third centuries, who pretended a regard to the name of Jesus Christ, and yet rejected baptism, is readily allowed; but then, it may be observed, that many of them had as little esteem for the Lord's supper. Nay, as a learned writer asserts the generality of them renounced the scriptures themselves. Nor am I ignorant that Socinus, in the latter end of the sixteenth century, considered baptism as an indifferent thing, except in reference to such as are converted from Judaism, Paganism, or Mahometanism; but our brethren with whom I am now concerned will hardly allow, that societies formed on the principles of those ancient corrupters of Christianity, nor yet on those of Socinus, are worthy to be called Churches of Christ. Vid. Suicerum, Thesaur. Eccles. sub voce ΒΑΠΤΙΣΜΑ and Dr Wall's Hist. Inf. Bap. Part II. Chap. V.

But is it not strange, strange to astonishment, if the scriptures contain their sentiment, and vindicate their conduct, that it never was discovered by any who acknowledge the proper Deity of Jesus Christ, till the latter end of the last century? Long before then, almost every principle of the Christian faith, almost every branch of Christian worship, had been the subject either of learned or unlearned controversy, among such as thought themselves the disciples of Jesus Christ. The Quakers arose, it is well known, about the time when this new sentiment was first adopted in England; and they entirely renounced baptism, as well as the Lord's supper. But, so far as appears, the people of that denomination never supposed, that they who thought it their duty to celebrate the sacred supper, were at liberty to do it before they were baptized.—The ingenious author of the Pilgrim's Progress was one of the first, in this kingdom, who dared to assert, that the want of baptism is no bar to communion, and acted accordingly. The Quakers arising a little before him, proceeded a step further, and entirely cashiered both baptism and the supper of our Lord; looking upon them as low, carnal, temporary appointments. Much respect, I allow, is due to the character of Bunyan. He was an eminent servant of Jesus Christ, and patiently suffered in his Master's cause. Many of his writings have been greatly useful to the church of God, and some of them, it is probable, will transmit his name with honor to future ages. But yet I cannot persuade myself, that either his judgment or his piety appeared in this bold innovation. The disciples of George Fox, though less conformable to the word of God, acted more consistently with their own principles, than did the justly celebrated dreamer then, or those who practise free communion now.

Some of the Popish missionaries among the Indians have been charged, by respectable authorities, with concealing the doctrine of the cross from their hearers, lest they should be tempted to despise the great Founder of the Christian religion, because he made his exit on a gibbet; they are said to have made it their principal aim, to persuade the poor ignorant creatures to be baptized, imagining that they would be christianized, by a submission to that ordinance; as if being baptized, and conversion to Jesus Christ, were one and the same thing! What a destructive delusion this! What an impious exaltation of a positive institution, into the place of redeeming blood, and the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit!—But were one of our ministering brethren who plead for free communion, to be sent as a missionary into those parts of the world; he, I presume, would not be in the least danger of thus over-rating baptism, and of depreciating its great institutor. No; he would boldly preach a crucified and risen Jesus, as the only foundation of hope for his hearers; and, if the energy of God attended his labors with considerable success, he would think it his duty to lay before such as believed in Christ, what he had learned from the New Testament, relating to a gospel church—its nature and ordinances, its privileges, duties and great utility. In doing of which, he could hardly forbear to mention baptism, as an appointment of his divine master: but though he might mention it, yet, on his hypothesis, he could not require a submission to it, as previously necessary to their incorporating as a church, and their having communion together at the Lord's table.

He might, indeed, recommend it to his young converts, as having something agreeable in it; but if they did not see its propriety; or if, on any other account unknown to him, they did not choose to comply, and yet were desirous of being formed into a church state, and of having communion at the Lord's table; he could not refuse, though not one of them was, or would be baptized. For if it be lawful to admit one believer to communion, purely as a believer, and without baptism; it cannot be criminal to admit all such, if they desire it: that which is proper and right for one, being so to a million, if they be in the same circumstances. Thus he would gather a church in perfect contrast with those formed by his fellow missionaries. For, while they put baptism in the place of the Saviour, he would reject his command, and lay the ordinance entirely aside: they make it all and he make it nothing.—And were a narrative of such proceedings to fall into the hands of a Pædobaptist, who had never heard of any that practised, or pleaded, for free communion, what a singular figure it would make in his view! 'A minister of Jesus Christ, he would say, gathering a church among the Indians, and administering the sacred supper, yet all his communicants unbaptized! Strange, indeed!—A Christian minister, called a Baptist, entirely omitting that very ordinance from which he takes his denomination! For the Baptists, of all men, are said to love water and to be fond of baptism. It exceeds the bounds of credibility; but, if it be a fact, he is the oddest mortal and the most unaccountable Baptist that ever lived. The ambiguity of his character would be such, that the pen of ecclesiastical history would always be doubtful what to call him, or under what denomination of religious professors to appoint his place!' Such would be the surprise and such the reflections of both the learned and the vulgar, who had not heard of Baptists that plead for free communion; they being the only Christians now in the world, for aught appears, that are capable of realizing such a report.

SECTION III.

Arguments against Free Communion at the Lord's Table.

It must, I think, be allowed, that the order and connexion of positive appointments in divine worship, depend as much on the sovereign pleasure of the great Legislator, as the appointments themselves; and if so, we are equally bound to regard that order and connexion, in their administration, as to observe the appointments at all. Whoever, therefore, objects to that order, or deviates from it, opposes that sovereign authority by which those branches of worship were first instituted.—For instance: Baptism and the Lord's supper, it is allowed on all hands, are positive ordinances; and, as such, they depend for their very existence on the sovereign will of God. Consequently, which of them should be administered prior to the other, (as well as, to what persons, in what way, and for what end) must depend entirely on the will of their divine Author. His determination must fix their order; and his revelation must guide our practice.

Here, then, the question is, Has our sovereign Lord revealed his will, in regard to this matter? “To the law and to the testimony—How readest thou?”

To determine the query, we may first consider the order of time, in which the two positive institutions of the New Testament were appointed. That baptism was an ordinance of God, that submission to it was required, and that it was administered to multitudes, before the sacred supper was heard of, or had an existence, are undeniable facts. There never was a time, since the ministry of our Lord's forerunner commenced, in which it was not the duty of repenting and believing sinners to be baptized. The venerable John, the twelve apostles, and the Son of God incarnate, all united in recommending baptism, at a time when it would have been impious to have eaten bread and drank wine as an ordinance of divine worship. Baptism, therefore, had the priority, in point of institution ; which is a presumptive evidence that it has, and ever will have, a prior claim on our obedience.

Let us secondly consider the order of words, in that commission which was given to the ambassadors of Christ. He who is King in Zion, when asserting the plenitude of his legislative authority, and giving direction to his ministering servants, with great solemnity says ; “All power is given to me in heaven and earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost ; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.”^{*} Such is the high commission, and such the express command, of Him who is Lord of all, when addressing those that were called to preach his word, and administer his institutions.—Here, it is manifest, the commission and command are, first of all to teach ; then—what ? To baptize ? or to administer the Lord’s supper ? I leave common sense to determine. A limited commission includes a prohibition of such things as are not contained in it ; and positive laws imply their negative. For instance : When God commanded Abram to circumcise all his males, he readily concluded, that neither circumcision, nor any rite of a similar nature, was to be administered to his females. And, as our brethren themselves maintain, when Christ commanded that believers should be baptized, without mentioning any others ; he tacitly prohibited that ordinance from being administered to infants ; so, by parity of reason, if the same sovereign Lord commanded, that believers should be baptized—baptized immediately after they have made a profession of faith ; then he must intend, that the administration of baptism should be prior to a reception of the Lord’s supper ; and, consequently, tacitly prohibits every unbaptized person having communion at his table.

Thirdly. The order of administration in the primitive and apostolic practice, now demands our notice. That the apostles, when endued with power from ou high, understood our Lord in the sense for which we plead, and practised accordingly, is quite evident. For thus it is written; "Then they that gladly received his word were" what? admitted to the Lord's table? No; but "baptized. And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in breaking of bread and in prayer."*—Now, in regard to the members of this first Christian church, either our opponents conclude that they were all baptized, or they do not. If the latter, whence is their conclusion drawn? Not from the sacred historian's narrative. For thence we learn, that they whose hearts were penetrated by keen convictions, were exhorted to be baptized—that they who gladly received the truth were actually baptized—and that they who were baptized, and they only, for any thing that appears to the contrary, were added to the church. In what book, in what chapter, in what verse is any declaration found, relating to the church at Jerusalem, that can warrant a conclusion that unbaptized persons ate of the Lord's supper?

^{*} Matt. xxviii 18, 19, 20.

If all the members of this truly apostolic church were baptized; then, either the constitution of it, in that respect, is expressive of the mind of Christ, and is a model for succeeding churches, or it is not. If the former, either Jesus Christ discovered some defect in that plan of proceeding, and, in certain cases, countermanded his first order, or it must be wrong to admit persons to communion, who are not baptized. But if this apostolic precedent, is not expressive of the mind of Christ, and the pattern for imitation to the end of the world; the apostles, were either ignorant of our Lord's will, or unfaithful in the performance of it. Consequences these, which cannot be admitted, without greatly prejudicing the honor and interest of true religion, and not a little contributing to the cause of infidelity: for which reason they will, no doubt, be abhorred by all our brethren.

It is manifest from the first and most authentic history of the primitive Christian church, contained in the Acts of the apostles; that after sinners had received the truth and believed in Jesus Christ, they were exhorted and commanded, by unerring teachers, to be baptized without delay. For thus we read; “Repent and be baptized every one of you”—“When they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women”—“And Philip said, If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him”—“And was baptized, he and all his straightway”—“Many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed, and were baptized” “And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized”—“Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost, as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord”—Acts ii. 38. viii. 12. 37. xvi. 33. xviii. 8. xxii. 16. x. 47.—Hence, it is abundantly evident, that baptism, in those days, was far from being esteemed an indifferent thing; and equally far from being deferred, till the Christian converts had enjoyed communion at the Lord’s table for months and years. Submission to baptism was the first, the very first public act of obedience, to which both Jews and Gentiles were called, after they believed in Jesus Christ. The highest evidence of a person’s acceptance with God, though attended with the baptism of the Holy Spirit in the bestowal of miraculous gifts, was so far, in the account of Peter, from superseding the necessity of a submission to the ordinance of baptism; that he urged the consideration of those very acts, as a reason why they who were so blessed and honored should submit to it immediately. Consequently, while we revere the authority by which the apostles acted, and while we believe that infant sprinkling is not baptism; we are obliged, in virtue of these ancient precedents, and by all that is amiable in a consistent conduct, to admit none to communion at the Lord's table, whom we do not consider to be really baptized according to the command of Christ.

* Acts ii. 41, 42.

Nor have we the least reason to believe that the apostles were invested with a discretionary power, to alter our Lord's institutions as they might think proper; either as to mode, or subject, or their order and connexion one with another. They never pretend to any such power; they utterly disclaim it. Let us hear the declaration of one, as the language of all, and that in regard to the sacred supper. "I have received of the Lord, that which also I delivered unto you." And again, relating to his doctrine in general, when writing to the same people, and in the same epistle, he says; "I delivered unto you that which I also received."—1 Cor. xi. 23. xv. 3.—The apostles being only servants in the house of God, had no more authority to alter or dispense with an ordinance of Jesus Christ, than any other minister of the word. Their apostolic gifts and powers did not at all invest them with a right of legislation in the kingdom of their divine Lord. They were still but stewards; as such they claimed regard from the churches, in which they labored and to which they wrote; at the same time freely acknowledging, that it was their indispensable duty to "be found faithful" in the whole extent of their office; they being accountable to the great Head of the church. They acted, therefore, in the whole compass of their duty, under the command, and by the direction of the ascended Jesus. Nay, the more they were honored and blessed by him, the more were they bound to obey the least intimation of his will.

Fourthly. If we regard the different signification of the two institutions, it will appear that baptism ought to precede. In submitting to baptism, we have an emblem of our union and communion with Jesus Christ, as our great representative, in his death, burial and resurrection; at the same time declaring, that we "reckon ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive to God;" and that it is our desire, as well as our duty, to live devoted to him. And as, in baptism, we profess to have received spiritual life; so in communicating at the Lord's table, we have the emblems of that heavenly food by which we live, by which we grow, and in virtue of which we hope to live for ever. And as we are born of God but once, so we are baptized but once: but as our spiritual life is maintained by the continued agency of divine grace, and the comfort of it enjoyed by the habitual exercise of faith on the dying Redeemer, so it is our duty and privilege frequently to receive the holy supper. Hence theological writers have often called baptism, the sacrament of regeneration, or of initiation: and the Lord's supper, the sacrament of nutrition.

Whether, therefore, we consider the order of time, in which these two institutions were appointed; or the order of words, in the great commission given by our Lord to his ministering servants; or the order of administration in the apostolic practice; or the different signification of the two solemn appointments, a submission to baptism ought ever to precede a reception of the Lord's supper.

Should any one question the validity of this inference, I would ask; Whether, in regard to the sacred supper, he might not as well deny the necessity of always blessing the bread, before it be broken; or of breaking the bread, before it be received; or of receiving the bread, before the wine? Or, by what better arguments, he would prove the opposite conduct, either unlawful or improper? Nay, if these declarations, and facts, and precedents, be not sufficient to determine the point in our favor; it will be exceedingly hard, if not impossible, to conclude with certainty, in what order any two institutions that God ever appointed, were to be administered. For, surely, that order of proceeding which agrees with the time in which two institutions were appointed; with the words in which the observation of them was enjoined; with the first administration of them by unerring teachers; and with their different signification, must be the order of truth, the order of propriety, and the order of duty, because it is the order of God. We do well to remember, that when Paul commends the Corinthians for "keeping the ordinances as they were delivered to them ;" it is plainly and strongly implied, that divine ordinances are given us to keep ; that they who keep them as they were instituted, are to be commended ; and that they who do not keep them at all, or observe them in a different order or manner from that at first appointed, are worthy of censure.

It appears then, that the order in which the two positive institutions of Jesus Christ should be administered, is no less clearly expressed in the New Testament, than the mode and subject of baptism.

It would, no doubt, have been highly offensive to God, if the priests or the people of old had inverted the order appointed by him, for the administration of his own solemn appointments. For instance ; First admit to the passover, afterwards circumcise ; burn incense in the holy place, then offer the propitiatory sacrifice. Have we any reason, then, to imagine, that a similar breach of order is not equally displeasing to God, under the New Testament economy ? If not, it must be supposed, that the Most High has not so great a regard to the purity of his worship, or is less jealous of his honor, and does not so much insist on his eternal prerogative now, as he did under the former dispensation : suppositions these, which they who acknowledge his universal dominion and absolute immutability, will hardly admit.

The argument on which mixed communion is urged, if suffered to operate in its full extent, would exclude both baptism and the Lord's supper from the worship of God. Baptism, it is said ought never to be made a term of communion in the house of God. It is affirmed that the grand, the only query, that is really necessary relating to a candidate for communion, is, Has God received him ? Is he a believer in Jesus Christ ?

If this grand rule of proceeding be right, we are bound to receive believers, as such, and have communion with them at the Lord's table, though they do not consider themselves as baptized. I would beg leave to ask ; whether they would receive a candidate for communion, whom they esteem as a believer in Jesus Christ, who has not been baptized in infancy ;

nor is willing to be baptized at all? The supposition of a person, in such circumstances, applying for fellowship at the Lord's table, is far from being improbable; nay, I have known it a real fact. What, then, would our brethren do in such a case?—If they receive a person, in the supposed case, they avowedly reject baptism, as unnecessary to fellowship in a church of Christ; for if it be not requisite in every instance, it is not so in any. If they refuse him, it must be because he is not baptized; for they consider him as a partaker of divine grace. If they reject him purely on that ground, Baptists ought to reject all who have had no other than infant baptism; because they consider it as a very different thing from the appointment of Christ. But, as before hinted, by the same rule that we receive one to communion, who is not baptized; who does not consider himself as baptized; who does not pretend to be baptized; we may receive all: for as there is but one Lawgiver, there is but one law, relating to this matter; and he who has a right to dispense with it once, may do so as often as he pleases. Consequently, the principle adopted by those who plead for free communion, has a natural tendency to exclude baptism from the worship of God.

I conclude, that though such a proceeding would be quite novel, absolutely unexampled in the churches of Christ, and would, probably, both astonish and offend sister communities, the church must receive him. But if it be lawful in one instance, it must be so in a thousand; and, therefore, a church on this principle, might thus go on, till the Lord's supper were entirely rejected by all her members, and banished from the worship of God, as it is among the Quakers.

The church of England has justly incurred the censure of all Protestant Dissenters, for her arrogant claim of 'power to decree rites or ceremonies,' in the worship of God, 'and of authority in controversies of faith;'^{*} because such a claim infringes on the prerogative royal of Jesus Christ. But do not our brethren tacitly assume a similar power, when they presume to set aside an ordinance of Christ, or to reverse the order of divine institutions? it being demonstrable, that as great an authority is necessary to lay aside an old, established rite; or to invert the order and break the connexion of several rites; as can be required to institute one that is entirely new. 'For it is a maxim in law;' and holds good in divinity, 'That it requires the same strength to dissolve as to create an obligation.'*—If it be lawful to dispense with an appointment of God, out of regard to our weaker brethren, we cannot reasonably think it unlawful to practise the appointments of a National Church, out of regard to the ruling powers; submission to the latter, being no less plainly required in Scripture, than condescension to the former. And if we may safely connive at one human invention, so as to supersede and take place of a divine institution; why may not the church of England make what appointments she pleases? A little reflection will convince us, that he whose authority is competent to the setting aside or altering of one divine institution, has a power equal to his wishes—may ordain times, and forms, and rites of worship; may model the house of God according to his own pleasure. But can such an authority belong to any besides the Great Supreme? No; to such an ordaining, or dispensing power, neither church nor synod, neither parliament nor conclave, neither king nor pope, has the least claim. For as the exertion of Omnipotence was equally necessary to the creation of a worm, as an angel; of an atom, as a world; so the interposition of divine authority is no less necessary to set aside, or to alter, one branch of instituted worship, than to add a thousand religious rites, or essentially to alter the whole Christian system.

* Articles of the Church of England, No. xx.

Nor are those writers who have appeared in vindication of the English Establishment, ignorant of their advantage over such Protestant Dissenters as proceed on the principles here opposed. For thus they argue; "If, notwithstanding the evidence produced, that baptism by immersion is suitable, both to the institution of our Lord and his apostles ; and was by them ordained to represent our burial with Christ, and so our dying unto sin, and our conformity to his resurrection by newness of life ; as the apostle doth clearly maintain the meaning of that rite : I say, if notwithstanding this, all our (Pædobaptist) Dissenters do agree to sprinkle the baptized infant ; why may they not as well submit to the significant ceremonies imposed by our church ? For since it is as lawful to add unto Christ's institution a significant ceremony, as to diminish a significant ceremony which he or his apostles instituted, and use another in its stead, which they never did institute ; what reason can they have to do the latter, and yet refuse submission to the former ? And why should not the peace and union of the church be as prevailing with them to perform the one, as in their mercy to the infant's body to neglect the other ?”*—I leave the intelligent reader to apply this reasoning to the case before us, and shall only observe ; that if this learned writer had been addressing free communion Baptists, his argument would have had superior force. Because our Pædobaptist brethren believe that infant sprinkling is real baptism, and practise it as having the stamp of divine authority ; whereas Baptists believe no such thing, and consider it as a mere human invention.

* Blackstone's Comment, on the Laws of England, Vol. I. Book I. ch. 2

As the sovereign authority and universal dominion of God, over his rational creatures ; as his absolute right, not only to worship, but also to be worshipped in his own way, are more strongly asserted and brightly displayed in his positive institutions, than in any other branches of his worship ; so, it is manifest, that we cannot disobey his revealed will concerning them, without impeaching his wisdom and opposing his sovereignty. Because a special interposition of divine authority, and an express revelation of the divine will, constitute the basis, the only basis, on which such institutions rest, in regard to their mode and subject, their order and connexion one with another.

* Dr. Whitby's Protestant Reconciler, p. 280.

For us then, to admit, as a divine institution, what we verily believe is a human invention, would be to act an unjustifiable part. For, on our principles, infinite wisdom chose and absolute sovereignty ordained professing believers as the subjects, and immersion as the mode of baptism.

Again: as the sovereign will of God is more concerned and manifested in positive ordinances than in any other branches of holy worship; so it is evident, from the history of the Jewish church, which is the history of Providence for near two thousand years, that the divine jealousy was never sooner inflamed, nor ever more awfully expressed, than when God's ancient people failed in their obedience to such commands, or deviated from the prescribed rule of such institutions. The destruction of Nadab and Abihu, by fire from heaven; the breach that was made upon Uzzah; the stigma fixed and the curses denounced on Jeroboam; together with the fall and ruin of all mankind, by our first father's disobedience to a positive command, are among the many authentic proofs of this assertion.—Nor need we wonder at the divine procedure, in severely punishing such offenders. For knowingly to disobey the positive laws of Jehovah, is to impeach his wisdom or his goodness, in such institutions; and impiously to deny his legislative authority and absolute dominion over his creatures. And though the methods of Providence, under the gospel economy, are apparently much more mild and gentle, in regard to offenders in similar cases; yet our obligation to a conscientious and punctual obedience is not in the least relaxed. For that divine declaration, occasioned by the dreadful catastrophe of Aaron's disobedient sons, is an eternal truth, and binding on all generations; "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me."—Levit. x. 1, 2, 3.—When God speaks, we should be all attention; and when he commands, we should be all submission. The clearer light which God has afforded, and the richer grace which Christ has manifested, under the present dispensation; are so far from lessening, that they evidently increase our obligations to perform every divine command relating to Christian worship. For, certainly, it must be allowed, that they on whom greater favors are bestowed and higher honors conferred, are so much the more obliged to revere, love, and obey their divine Benefactor. And, as a certain author justly observes, ‘To take advantage of dark surmises, or doubtful reasoning, to elude obligations of any kind, is always looked upon as an indication of a dishonest heart.’* Most dangerous then, is the principle, and rebellious the conduct of those professors, who think themselves warranted, by the grace of the gospel, to trifle with God’s positive appointments. Whether Jehovah lay his commands on Gabriel in glory, or on Adam in paradise; whether he enjoin the performance of any thing on Patriarchs, or Jews, or Christians, they are all and equally bound to obey, or else his commands must stand for nothing. Neither diversity of economy, nor difference of state, makes any alteration in this respect. We must be absolutely independent of God, before our obligations to obey him can be dissolved. But as the former is impossible, so is the latter.†

This reasoning is very strongly supported by the following quotation, taken from a little publication by Mr. John Ryland. ‘The ordinances of the gospel are established by the authority of Christ, as king and supreme law-giver in his church; they are particularly enforced by his own example, and his will expressly declared: and as they have no dependence on any circumstances which are liable to vary in different countries or distant periods of time, it necessarily follows that the primitive model of administration should be strictly and conscientiously adhered to. No pretence to greater propriety, nor any plea of inconveniency, can justify our boldly opposing the authority of God by the alteration of his law, and substituting a human ordinance instead of a divine. In a former dispensation, in which the ritual was numerous and burdensome, the great Jehovah was particularly jealous of his honor as Supreme Lawgiver, and looked upon the least innovation as a direct opposition of his authority. Moses, we are informed, was admonished of God to make all things according to the pattern showed him in the mount. And those unfortunate youths who presumed to after the form of his religion, and worshipped him in a way he had not commanded, fell under the severest marks of his displeasure; which shows that he looked upon the least innovation in the ceremonial part of his precepts, as an impious and daring opposition and contempt of his authority, and as deserving of peculiar and distinguished vengeance, as a direct and open violation of the moral law. And as the great King of the universe required such exactness and punctuality, and insisted on such scrupulous exactness in the performance of the minutest rite belonging to the legal dispensation; it would be extremely difficult to assign a reason why he should be more lax and careless, and allow a greater scope to human discretion under the Christian economy. The greater light which shines in our religion, the small number and simplicity of its ceremonials, and the end and design of those institutions being more clearly revealed; are reasons which strongly indicate the contrary. And if it be further observed, that the religion of Jesus is particularly calculated to set aside worldly wisdom and mortify the pride of man; it cannot, without great absurdity, be supposed, that the sublime Author of it will dispense with the performance of his positive laws, or admit of the least variation, to honor that wisdom, or indulge that pride which the whole scope of his gospel hath a manifest tendency to abase. Surely then it behoves Christians, in an affair of such consequence, to be circumspect and wary; it will certainly be well for them, if they can give a good account of their practice, and a satisfactory answer to that important question, *Who hath required this at your hand?

* Dr. Oswald’s Appeal to Common Sense, p. 21.

† Witsii Miscel. Sac. Tom. I. Lib. II. Dissert. II.

To dispense with the positive appointments of

* Six Views of Believers' Baptism, p. 17—20.

Jesus Christ, or to reverse the order of their administration, in condescension to weak believers, and with a view to the glory of God, cannot be right. For, as an eminent author observes, 'They must be evasions past understanding, that can hold water against a divine order—God never gave power to any man, to change his ordinances, or to dispense with them. God is a jealous God, and careful of his sovereignty. 'Tis not for any inferior person to alter the stamp and impression the prince commands. None can coin ordinances but Christ; and, till he call them in, they ought to be current among us.* To which I may add the testimony of another learned writer, who says, when speaking of baptism; 'As the salvation of men ought to be dear unto us; so the glory of God, which consisteth in that his orders be kept, ought to be much more dear.† What is dispensing with a positive appointment, but laying it aside, or conniving at a neglect of it, on such occasions in which it was commanded to be administered? Now, for us to admit unbaptized persons to the Lord's table, would be to lay entirely aside, and annul the ordinance. To dispense with a divine institution, for the edification of weak believers, and invert the order of God's appointments and break his positive laws, with a view to his glory, would seem to border on that hateful maxim, "Let us do evil that good may come." A position, which the pen of inspiration execrates; which every virtuous mind abhors. But that no pretence of doing honor to God, nor any plea of being useful to men, can possibly deserve the least regard, if the measures which must be pursued to obtain the end interfere with the divine revealed will, we learn from various facts recorded in the Bible. Uzzah, for instance, when he put forth his hand to support the tottering ark, thought, no doubt, he was doing honor to him who dwelt between the cherubims, over the mercy-seat; and, at the same time, as that sacred coffer was of the last importance in the ancient sanctuary, he showed an equal regard to the edification o.

* Charnock's Works, Vol. II. p. 763, 773, 774 Edn. 1.

† Cartwright, in Wall's History of Infant Baptism. Part I. Chap. 15.

his fellow worshippers, by endeavoring to preserve it from injury. But, notwithstanding this fair pretext; nay, though the man after God's own heart saw little amiss in his conduct; (perhaps, thought he deserved praise as the ark, with all that pertained to it, and its whole management, were of positive appointment;) he, whose name is JEALOUS, was greatly offended. The sincere, the well-meaning man, having no command nor any example for what he did, fell under Jehovah's anger and lost his life, as the reward of his officiousness. And as the Holy Ghost has recorded the fact so circumstantially,* we have reason to consider it as a warning to all, of the danger there is in tampering with positive ordinances; and as a standing evidence, that God will have his cause supported and his appointments administered, in his own way.—The case of Saul, and the language of Samuel to that disobedient monarch, inculcate the same truth. "The people," said Saul to the venerable prophet, "took of the spoil, sheep and oxen—to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal. And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry."† —Remarkable words! The king of Israel, we find, pleaded a regard to the worship and the honor of God. The cattle were spared, that Jehovah's altar might be furnished with plenty of the finest sacrifices. But Samuel soon overruled this fair pretence. He quickly informed the infatuated prince, that obedience to divine appointments, especially in such duties as depend entirely on an express command (as the utter destruction of Amalek did, and as communion at the Lord's table now does) is better in the sight of God, than hecatombs of bleeding sacrifices, or clouds of smoking incense: and, consequently, better than a misapplied tenderness to any of our fellow-creatures, or a misguided zeal to promote their peace and edification. At the same time the prophet assures him, that when the Most High commands, nothing can excuse a non-performance; because disobedience to a plain, positive, known command, is justly classed with idolatry and witchcraft.

* 2 Sam. vi. 1—11.

† 1 Sam. xv. 21, 22, 23.

A very sensible writer, in the conclusion of a discourse upon this passage, observes, that we may learn from this text, what are the true characteristics of acceptable obedience. 'It must be implicit; founded immediately on the authority of God. We must not take upon us to judge of the moment and importance of any part of his will, further than he hath made it known himself. It is a very dangerous thing for us to make comparisons between one duty and another; especially with a view of dispensing with any of them, or altering their order, and substituting one in another's place.'—Another 'character of true obedience is, that it be self-denied and impartial; that it be not directed or qualified by our present interest.—It is too common, that our own interest both points out the object, and assigns the measure of our obedience; and in that case, it does not deserve the name of obedience to God at all. When the Christian is devoted to God, ready at his call, and equally disposed to any employment assigned him in providence, he then may be said indeed to do his will.—It must 'be universal, without any exception. Saul, and the children of Israel, had complied so far with the order given them, that the greatest part both of the people and substance of Amalek was destroyed; but he stopped short, and knowingly left unfinished what had been enjoined him by the same authority.'*

When a Pædobaptist applies for communion with Baptists, he acts upon a persuasion that he has been rightly and truly baptized: for there is reason to believe, that the generality of our Pædobaptist brethren would start at the thought of partaking at the Lord's table, while they consider themselves as unbaptized. Consequently, when our opponents admit one of them to communion, they confirm him in what they consider as a false presumption, and practically approve of what, at other times, they boldly pronounce a human invention, a tradition of men, and will-worship; for such infant sprinkling must be, if not a divine appointment. Nor can they exculpate themselves in this respect, unless they were professedly to receive him, as unbaptized. Because he considers himself as baptized, he desires communion as baptized; nor has he any idea of sitting down at the Lord's table, as unbaptized; well knowing, that such an attempt would be contrary to the apostolic pattern, and to the sense of the Christian church in general.

* Dr. Witherspoon's Practical Discourses, Vol. I. p. 335, 336.

That circumcision was, by divine command, an indispensable qualification, in every male, for a participation of the Jewish passover, and communion in the sanctuary worship, is generally allowed. And though I am far from thinking that baptism came in the place of circumcision, as many of our Pædobaptist brethren suppose; yet that the former is equally necessary to communion at the Lord's table, under the Christian economy, as the latter was to every male in order to partake of the paschal feast, and to unite in the tabernacle service, I am fully persuaded. Nor is my opinion singular. It has been the sense of the Christian church in every age; and, excepting the few Baptists who plead for free communion, it is the voice of the Christian world in general at this day.—I do not find that the necessity of circumcision, for the purposes just mentioned, was ever controverted, either by the ancient or modern Jews. We will suppose, however, for the sake of argument, that it was disputed in the Jewish church; and that, amidst a great variety of interesting intelligence which the Rabbinical writers pretend to give, concerning ancient customs and ancient disputes, they are found to speak as follows: 'In the days of our master, Moses, disputes arose about the nature and necessity of circumcision: that is, whether the ancient rite was to be performed on the foreskin, or on a finger; and, whether it was an indispensably requisite qualification, in every male, for a seat at the paschal feast, and admission to the sanctuary worship. The generality of our fathers maintained that no male, though a son of Abraham, that no Gentile, though he might acknowledge and serve Abraham's God, had any claim to communion in those joyful and solemn services, if he was not circumcised according to the divine command. Others contended with no less assurance, that circumcision being only an outward sign of what is internal and spiritual, every male, whether a descendant from the loins of our father Abraham, or one of the Gentile race who knew and feared the God of Israel, had an undeniable claim to fellowship, though it were not the foreskin of his flesh, but a finger that was circumcised. The latter asserted with great confidence, that the holy blessed God having accepted such, (as plainly appeared by their having the internal and spiritual circumcision) it would be absurd and uncharitable to refuse them communion. And when disputing with their opponents, they would with an air of superior confidence demand; Will you reject from fellowship those whom God has received?—Absolutely reject those who have the thing signified, barely because, in your opinion, they want the external sign?—Those who possess the substance, perhaps, to a much greater degree than yourselves, merely because they want the shadow? What, will you refuse communion to a brother Israelite, or a pious Gentile, in the tabernacle here below, with whom you hope to enjoy everlasting fellowship in the temple above? Strange attachment to the manner of performing an external rite! Besides, great allowances must be made for the prejudices of education. These brethren whom you reject as if they were heathens or were absolutely unclean, have been educated in the strongest prejudices against what we think the true circumcision. They have been taught from their earliest infancy, that though our fathers, for a few centuries after the rite was established, generally circumcised the foreskin; yet that the part on which the ceremony was first performed, is by no means essential to the ordinance. Various inconveniencies attend the mode of administration then generally practised; and our custom is not forbidden by any divine revelation. Besides, though it be admitted that the divinely appointed mode of administering the sacred rite is of some importance; yet it must be admitted that the edification of such as truly fear God is of infinitely greater importance. But, if you exclude them from the solemn sanctuary worship, you debar them from a capital mean of their spiritual benefit. You should also consider, who is to be the judge of what is, or is not, the true circumcision. Every man, most certainly, must judge for himself, and not one for another; else you destroy the right of private judgment; you invade the sacred prerogative of conscience; and tacitly advance a claim to infallibility. If your brethren, who circumcise a finger instead of the part appointed, be satisfied in their own minds, they are circumcised to themselves; and while the answer of a good conscience attends it, God will and does own them in it, to all the ends designed by it; so that while they consider it as laying them under the same obligations to holiness of heart and life, as we consider our circumcision to do us, why should you not have fellowship with them?—Nor are you sufficiently aware, how much you injure the cause of real religion, and promote the baneful interests of infidelity, by being so strict and rigid. Were you to be more candid and charitable in regard to this matter, it might be expected that numbers of our brethren, who, it must be allowed, administer this rite in a very improper manner, would cordially unite with us, and in time utterly renounce their mistake. We should also have reason to hope that many of our Gentile neighbors, who detest circumcision as performed by us, might become proselytes to the Jewish religion, and worship the most high God in fellowship with us. But so long as you insist not only on the rite itself (for that we ourselves are not willing to give up entirely) but on that mode of administration which is so obnoxious to them, as indispensably necessary to communion with you; it will be, not only a wall of partition between us and them, but a bone of contention among the chosen tribes themselves. Consequently it must impede, greatly impede, the exercise of that love to God, and that affection for man, which are of much greater importance than the most accurate performance of a merely external rite.”

Now supposing our brethren in the course of their reading to meet with such an account, what would they think of it? What would they say? They would undoubtedly suspect the truth of the whole. They would consider it as a Rabbinical fable!

Now according to the judgment of the Christian world in general, circumcision was not more necessary for all the males who desired communion at the paschal supper and in the solemn services of the tabernacle, than baptism is to fellowship in the Christian church, and a seat at the Lord's table—there is a wider and a more material difference between baptism as now administered to infants, and baptism as appointed by Jesus Christ, than there would have been between cutting off the foreskin and circumcising a finger: because the latter would have been circumcision, and the circumcision of a proper subject also, though not of the part required; but sprinkling, whether infants or adults, is no more baptism, than it is immersion. Had any members of the ancient synagogue introduced or admitted such an alteration as that supposed, they might have defended it on the same general grounds, and with much greater plausibility, in several respects at least, than a Baptist could defend the practice of free communion. For I appeal to my reader, whether the Pentateuch of Moses and the scriptures of the prophets do not say as much of circumcising the finger, as the evangelical history and the writings of the apostles do of baptizing infants.

Paul, when meeting with certain disciples at Ephesus, desired to know, whether they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed. To whom they answered, “We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.” On which the apostle put the following question: “Unto what then were ye baptized?” And they said, “Unto John's baptism.” From which it plainly appears, that as these persons professed to be disciples of Jesus Christ, Paul took it for granted they had been baptized. For his query is not, Have you been baptized? But, “Unto, or into what then were ye baptized?" He inferred their baptism from their profession: and he had reason so to do. For he well knew, that the first administrator of the ordinance required a submission to it, of all that brought "forth fruits meet for repentance;" that the apostolic ministry demanded the same act of obedience, from all that believed in Jesus Christ; and the administration of baptism is a part of the ministerial office, being strictly connected with teaching the disciples of Christ, "to observe all things which he has commanded." And, as an author before quoted, justly remarks; 'We find that the preachers of the gospel always did it, and the people who gladly received the word desired it. How indifferent soever it appears to some in our days, yet the grace of God never failed to stir up an early regard to it in times of old.'*

Once more: Either Jesus Christ has informed us in the New Testament what baptism is, and what is requisite to communion at his table, or he has not. If he has, we cannot admit any thing as baptism which we believe is not so, nor receive any to communion but those whom we consider as qualified according to his directions, without violating our allegiance to him as the King Messiah, and rebelling against his government. If he has not, there is no judge in Israel, and every one may do that which is right in his own eyes, in regard to these institutions. If our Lord instituted baptism, and left it undetermined how and to whom it should be administered; if he appointed the sacred supper, without characterizing those who are to partake of it; his ministering servants have a discretionary power to administer them how and to whom they please. And if so, our brethren may sprinkle or immerse infants or adults, just as their own conveniency and the dispositions of their people require.

* Mr. Bradbury's Duty and Doctrine of Baptism, p. 70.—In a preceding page of the same Treatise, he says; 'I hear there are several who suppose that baptism is only the work of those that are grown up, and yet neglect it themselves. My brethren, whoever is in the right in doctrine, you are quite wrong in practice. Do not despise the advice of one who has more value for your happiness, than he has for his own opinion. I will give it you in the words of Ananias; "Why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, washing away thy sins, and calling on the name of the Lord." See as above p. 16.

SECTION IV.

Several Passages of Scripture considered, which are produced in favor of mixed communion.

THE cause which our brethren undertake to defend, is denominated by them, Free Communion. That communion, then, for which they plead, is free. But here I beg leave to ask, from what? The restraints of men? that is a laudable freedom. From the laws of Heaven? that were a licentious liberty. Absurd, in theory; impossible, in fact. It never was, it never can be the case, that God should institute a positive ordinance of divine worship, as the Lord's supper undoubtedly is, and leave it entirely to the discretion of men to whom it should be administered. Free—for whom? For every one that will? This none pretend. For all who imagine themselves believers? This no one asserts. For, they do not consider every one that thinks himself a believer and desires communion, as fit for it.

What, then, is the freedom for which they plead? Why, that Baptist churches should admit Pædobaptists into communion with them. In other words, that they should admit believers to the Lord's table, whom they consider as unbaptized. Such is free communion: in defence of which, several pamphlets have of late been published. Who can tell, but some brethren may so improve on the doctrine of liberty in regard to divine institutions of a positive nature, as to favor us, ere long, with a Plea for free Baptism?—With a dissertation intended to prove the lawfulness, and, in some cases, the necessity, of administering baptism to such whom we consider as unbelievers? especially, if the candidates for that ordinance be firmly persuaded in their own mind that they are believers in Jesus Christ.

But let us briefly consider the defence of this hypothesis. They argue, from several passages of scripture; from the temper required of real Christians, in their behavior one towards another; and object against us our own conduct in another respect.

The principal passages adduced from holy writ, and here to be considered, are the following:—"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations—for God hath received him—Receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God—God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith—I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."*

On which passages we may observe in general; whatever their meaning may be, except our opponents can make it appear that they contain the grant of a dispensing power to gospel ministers and churches; that is, unless these divine declarations authorize the ministers and churches of Christ to set aside an ordinance, or invert the order of its administration, as they may think proper; they are far from answering the exigencies of the case, or serving the purpose for which they are cited.

Again: The texts produced do not so much as mention communion at the Lord's table, nor appear to have the least reference to it. No; the Holy Ghost has other objects in view, in each place. As these are the principal passages to which our brethren appeal, we may take it for granted, that better are not to be found; and, consequently, that positive proof is wanting. But if it be allowed, that there is no positive evidence in favor of admitting unbaptized persons to the supper, it amounts to a concession that there is no proof at all. Nothing of a positive and ritual nature can be proved a duty, or agreeable to the will of God, merely by our own reasonings, or by arguments formed on moral precepts and general rules of conduct. For if once we admit any thing in the worship of God, as a duty, that is grounded, either on far-fetched inferences from particular declarations of scripture, in which the holy penmen do not appear to have had the least thought of the matter in question; or on our own ideas of expediency and usefulness, we shall not know where to stop. On this principle, a great number of ceremonies were brought into the church of Rome, and might be introduced by us, though not one of them could stand that divine query, "Who hath required this at your hand?" As it cannot be proved, by the deductions of reason, that it is the duty of any man to eat bread and to drink wine, as a branch of divine worship, but only from the testimony of God, so what he has revealed in regard to that matter is our only rule in all that relates to the Lord's supper. Consequently, as these passages say nothing at all about baptism, nor about communion at the Lord's table, either strict, or free; they have neither pertinency of application, nor force of argument. The New Testament knows no more of infant baptism, than it does of infant communion: and the arguments adduced in defence of the former, will equally apply to the latter.*

* Rom. xiv. 1. 3. and xv. 7. Acts. xv. 8, 9. 1 Cor ix. 19—23.

The converted Romans were commanded by Paul to "receive them that were weak in faith, as God and Christ had received them." And we are plainly informed, that the persons intended were such, as had not a clear discernment of their Christian liberty, in regard to the eating of meats forbidden by the ceremonial law, and the observation of days, that was of old required by it. What has this to do with free communion? Paul says, in this very epistle, "I commend unto you Phebe our sister,—that ye receive her in the Lord." Was her admission to the holy table the principal thing that he desired of the believing Romans? No; he evidently had something else in view; something that would manifest their love to a disciple of Christ, much more than barely permitting her to have communion with them in the sacred supper. For he immediately adds; "And that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you."* Or, did he solicit admission to the Lord's table, for himself and his fellow ministers, among the Corinthians, when he said ; " Receive us ; we have wronged no man ; we have corrupted no man ; we have defrauded no man ?"† Or, for Epaphroditus, when he thus expressed himself to the Philippians ; " Receive him, therefore, in the Lord, with all gladness, and hold such in reputation ?"‡ Or, for Onesimus, when he said to Philemon ; " Receive him, that is mine own bowels—Receive him as myself?"§ Was communion at the Lord's table the principal thing which the apostle John had in his eye, when he said ; " We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth ?"|| It is, I will venture to affirm, a much greater thing to receive either a weak or a strong believer, in the sense of these exhortations, than merely to grant him a place at the Lord's table.

* Dr. Priestley is also of the same opinion. For he says, 'No objection can be made to this custom, [i. e. of giving the Lord's supper to infants] but what may, with equal force, be made to the custom of baptizing infants. And he informs us, that infant communion is to this day the practice of the Greek churches, of the Russians, the Armenians, the Maronites, the Copts, the Assyrians, and probably all other oriental churches.' Address to Protestant Dissenters on giving the Lord's Supper to Children, p. 28, 31.

Besides, the faith of a sincere believer may be as weak, and require as much forbearance, in regard to the holy supper, as in respect of baptism. A reformed and really converted Catholic may desire fellowship with us, who still retains the Popish error of communion in one kind only : but are we obliged by this apostolic precept, to mutilate the sacred ordinance in condescension to his weakness ?—To embrace the weak, as well as the strong believer, in the arms of Christian affection, is a capital duty of the moral law. To bear with a brother's infirmities, and to " forbear one another in love," are certainly required by that command, which says ; " Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself:" and would have been our duty, if neither baptism nor the Lord's supper had ever existed. But are we to regulate our conduct in the admission of persons to a positive institution ;—to one which depends entirely on the sovereign pleasure of God, by inferences drawn from the general and natural duties of the moral law ?—Were the precepts of that eternal law ever considered by the priests or the peo

* Rom. xvi. 1, 2.

† 2 Cor. vii. 2.

‡ Philip. ii. 29.

§ Philem. 12, 17.

|| 3 John 8.

ple of old, as the rule of administering positive institutions? Had they not another system of precepts, express precepts, intended for that purpose? and was not such a ritual absolutely necessary?

Supposing, however, that there were no way of receiving one that is weak in faith, but by admitting him to the Lord's table, this text would be far from proving what our opponents desire; unless they could make it appear, that the "weak in faith" were unbaptized; or at least, so considered by their stronger brethren; for that is the point in dispute between us. But that Paul considered the believing Romans to whom he wrote, as baptized Christians, is allowed by all.

'But God receives the weak in faith; and we are expressly commanded to receive one another, not to doubtful disputations, but as Christ hath received us to the glory of God.' Granted: yet permit me to ask, Is the divine conduct, is the favor of God, or the kindness of Christ, in receiving sinners, the rule of our proceeding in the administration of positive institutions? Whom does God, whom does Christ receive? None but those that believe, and profess faith in the Lord Messiah? Our brethren will not affirm it. For if divine compassion did not extend to the dead in sin; if the kindness of Christ did not relieve the enemies of God; none of our fallen race would ever be saved. But does it hence follow, that we must admit the unbelieving and the unconverted, either to baptism, or the holy table? Our gracious Lord freely accepts all that desire it and all that come; but are we bound, by his example, to receive every one that solicits communion with us? Our opponents dare not assert it. For though the Great Supreme is entirely at liberty to do as he pleases, to reject or accept whom he will; yet it is not so with his ministering servants and professing people, in regard to the sacred supper. No; it is their indispensable duty and their everlasting honor, to regard his revealed will and obey his righteous commands. The divine precepts contained in the Bible, not the divine conduct in the administration of a sovereign Providence, are the only rule of our obedience in all things relating to positive institutions

Besides, gospel churches are sometimes obliged, by the laws of Christ, to exclude from their communion those whom he has received. Have churches never excluded any for scandalous backslidings, whom, notwithstanding, they could not but consider as received of Christ? Do they never exclude any but such of whom they have no hope? I cannot suppose, nor will they affirm any such thing. But if there may be a just cause of excluding such from communion whom God has received, why may there not be a sufficient reason of refusing communion to some, whom we look upon as the objects of God's peculiar favor? Is there not as great a degree of disapprobation discovered in the former case, as there is in the latter? and is not the word of God our only rule in both cases? It is not every one, therefore, that is received of Jesus Christ who is entitled to communion at his table; but such, and only such, as revere his authority, submit to his ordinances, and obey the laws of his house.

By the text from the Acts of the Apostles we learn, that "God is no respecter of persons;" that he, as an absolute sovereign, bestows his favors on Jews and Gentiles without any difference. But must we infer from hence, that they whose honor and happiness it is to be his obedient servants, are entirely at liberty to receive to communion at the Lord's table all that believe, without any difference? Can they justly conclude, that because Jehovah dispenses his blessings as he pleases, they may administer, or omit, his positive institutions as they please?

Once more: They produce, as much in their favor, the declarations of Paul to the church at Corinth, relating to his own conduct. "For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I may be partaker thereof with you." 1 Cor. ix. 19—23. And what do we learn in general from this passage, but that he out of his great concern for the good of mankind, and his abundant zeal for the glory of God, was willing to do, or forbear, any thing that was lawful, in order to gain an impartial hearing from both Jews and Gentiles wherever he came? I said, any thing that was lawful; the rule of which is the divine precept, or some example warranted by divine authority. Nor can we view these words in a more extensive sense, without implicitly charging the great apostle with temporizing, and highly impeaching his exalted character.—But what has this text, any more than the former, to do with the administration, or laying aside, of positive institutions? It was the duty of Aaron, as well as of Paul, and of us, to seek the happiness of his fellow creatures and the honor of God, to the utmost of his ability. But was this general obligation the rule of his performing the solemn sanctuary services on the great day of atonement? Could he conclude from hence, that if the dispositions of the people required it, he was at liberty to omit any of the sacred rites, or to transpose the order in which Jehovah commanded they should be performed? If any can make it appear that this passage really has a relation to the positive appointments of Christ, it must be considered as the Magna Charta of a dispensing, priestly power, in regard to those institutions.

SECTION V.

The Temper required of Christians towards one another, not contrary to our Practice—Our Conduct freed from the Charge of Inconsistency—No Reason to exalt the Lord's Supper, in point of Importance, as superior to the Ordinance of Baptism.

NOTHING is more common, with our opponents, when pleading for free communion, than to display the excellence of Christian charity; and to urge the propriety, the utility, the necessity of bearing with one another's mistakes, in matters that are non-essential; in which number they class the ordinance of baptism. The epithets not fundamental—non-essential, frequently applied to baptism, might be applied, with equal propriety to the Lord's supper? But in what respect is a submission to baptism non-essential? To our justifying righteousness, our acceptance with God, or an interest in the divine favor? So is the Lord's supper; and so is every branch of our obedience. For they will readily allow, that an interest in the divine favor, is not obtained by the miserable sinner, but granted by the Eternal Sovereign. That a justifying righteousness is not the result of human endeavors, but the work of our heavenly Substitute, and a gift of boundless grace. And that acceptance with the high and holy God, is not on conditions performed by us, but in consideration of the vicarious obedience and propitiatory sufferings of the great Immanuel. Nay, since our first father's apostacy, there never was an ordinance appointed of God, there never was a command given to man, that was intended to answer any such end.

Baptism is not fundamental; is not essential. True; if limited to the foregoing cases. But are we hence to infer, that it is not necessary on other accounts and in other views? If so, we may alter, or lay it aside, just as we please; and, on the same principle, we may dismiss, as non-essential, all order and every ordinance in the church of God.

Is not the institution of baptism a branch of divine worship? And is not the administration of it, prior to the Lord's supper, essential to that order in which Christ commanded his positive appointments to be regarded? "Let all things be done decently and in order." As the Divine Spirit requires the observation of order in the church of God, so Paul commends the Corinthians for "keeping the ordinances as he delivered them;" and expresses a holy joy on "beholding the order" of that Christian church which was at Colosse. But that order which the great Lord of all appointed, and in the practice of which the good apostle sincerely rejoiced, our brethren, would consider as a mere trifle—as comparatively nothing. But give me leave here to inquire, Whether the primitive order of gospel churches can be detached from the legislative authority of Jesus Christ? And, whether the exercise of that authority can be considered as having no connexion with his honor? A breach of that order which Christ appointed, as king in Zion, must be considered as an opposition to his crown and dignity. Jesus our Lawgiver is Jehovah; between whose honor and the happiness of sinful worms, there is, there can be no comparison. The latter is only a means, whereas the former is the grand end, not only of a church state, but of the whole economy of providence and grace. I may, therefore, venture to retort the argument; though it be admitted, that the edification of Christians is of great importance; yet it must be allowed, that the honor of our divine Sovereign is of infinitely greater importance; and, consequently, the primitive order of the gospel churches should be observed.

My readers must be a little surprised at such reasoning as I have just produced. Are they not ready to say, What, reverse the order of churches, appointed by God himself, with a view to edification! Dispense with a positive ordinance of heaven, and break a divine command, under the pretence of promoting obedience to Christ! If we are obliged, in some cases, to set aside an ordinance of divine worship, and to break a positive command, in order that certain individuals may perform another positive injunction of the great Legislator; the laws of Christ are not half so consistent as Paul's preaching; "which was not yea and nay." Nor have we, any thing like a parallel case, either in the Old or New Testament. We find, indeed, an instance of a typical rite giving way to natural necessities, as when David ate of the shewbread, without incurring a divine censure: but we have no example of a positive ordinance being set aside, in favor of any one's ignorance or prejudice against it, or that he might be edified by submitting to another positive institution, of which he desired to partake.

The neglect of circumcision by the Israelites in the wilderness, while they attended on other positive appointments of God, is argued strongly for free communion ; but let it not be forgotten that that omission is keenly censured by the Holy Ghost. The uncircumcised state of the people, whatever might be the occasion of it, is called a reproach, "the reproach of Egypt ;" which odium was rolled from them on the borders of Canaan, and the place in which they were circumcised was called by a new name, to perpetuate the memory of that event.* Now, as that neglect of the Israelites was a breach of the divine command, a reproach to their character as the sons of Abraham, and stands condemned by the Spirit of God ; it cannot authorize in us a similar omission, much less require it at our hands. Nor is that other instance, which is sometimes produced, relating to the feast of passover, in the reign of Hezekiah, any more to the purpose. For though many of the people were not "cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary ;" though "they did eat the passover otherwise than it was written," yet Hezekiah was so conscious of those irregularities, that he deprecated the divine anger, saying, "The good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek the Lord God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary. And the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people."† With what shadow of reason, then, or of reverence for God's commands, can any one plead this instance in favor of free communion ? Shall a deviation from a divine rule, a deviation that is acknowledged as criminal before the Lord, and for which pardon is requested, be adduced, as a precedent for the conduct of Christians ! What would our brethren have thought of Hezekiah and his people, had they taken the liberty of repeating the disorderly conduct, whenever they celebrated the paschal anniversary ?—taken the liberty of transgressing the divine rule, because Jehovah had once graciously pardoned their irregularities, and accepted their services, on a similar occasion ? Would they not have been chargeable with bold presumption, and with doing evil that good might come?—I heartily accord with the following declarations of a learned pen: ‘We must serve God, not as we think fit, but as he hath appointed. God must be judge of his own honor.—Nothing, then, is small, whereupon depends the sanctity of God’s commandment and our obedience.’* There is, however, little need of the maxims or the declarations of men, while we have the decision of Him who purchased the church with his own blood; of Him who is to be our final judge. Now the language of that Being is; “In all things that I have said unto you, be circumspect—Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.” And it is worthy of remark, that it stands recorded to the honor of Moses, seven or eight times in one chapter, that “he did as the Lord commanded him.”—Exod. xl.

* Joshua v. 9.

† 2 Chron. xxx. 18, 19, 20

The question is not, whatever our opponents may think, Whether baptism is essential to our salvation? But, Whether God has not commanded it? Whether it is not a believer’s duty to be found in it? And, Whether the pastor and members of a Baptist church could justify themselves, in admitting persons to communion that have never been baptized? On the principle assumed by those who charge us with bigotry in this thing, a professor that has no inclination to obey a divine command, may vindicate his refusal, by saying; ‘The performance of it is not essential to my happiness; for a sinner may be saved without it.’ A mode of arguing this, big with rebellion against the dominion of God: a principle, which, pursued in its consequences, is pregnant with ruin to immortal souls. What, shall we do nothing that God has commanded, unless we look upon it as essentially necessary to our future felicity? Is this the way to manifest our faith in Jesus and love to God?—How much better is the reasoning of Mr. Charnock, when he says: “Deus voluit, is a sufficient motive; and we cannot free ourselves from the censure of disobedience, if we observe not his commands in the same manner that he enjoins them; in their circumstances, as well as their substance.—Who can, upon a better account, challenge an exemption from positive institutions than our Saviour, who had no need of them: yet how observant was he of them, because they were established by divine authority! So that he calls his submitting to be baptized of John, a fulfilling of righteousness—Is it not a great ingratitude to God, to despise what he commands as a privilege? Were not the apostles men of an extraordinary measure of the Spirit, because of their extraordinary employments? And did they not exercise themselves in the institutions of Christ? How have many [meaning the Quakers] proceeded from the slighting of Christ's institutions, to the denying the authority of his word! A slighting Christ himself, crucified at Jerusalem, to set up an imaginary Christ within them!*

* Pemble’s Introduction to Worthy Receiving the Lord’s Supper, p. 21, 31.

‘But must we not exercise Christian charity, and bear with one another's infirmities? Should we not seek peace, and endeavor to promote harmony among the people of God?’ Undoubtedly: yet is there no way for us to exercise love and forbearance without practising free communion? Can we not promote peace and harmony without practically approving of infant sprinkling as if it were a divine ordinance, while we are firmly persuaded that God never appointed it? Or, are we bound to admit as a fact, what we verily believe is a falsehood? The distinction between a Christian who holds what I consider as a practical error in the worship of God, and the mistake maintained, is wide and obvious. It is not an erroneous principle, or an irregular practice, that is the object of genuine charity. No; it is the person who maintains an error, not the mistake defended, that calls for my candor. The former, I am bound, by the highest authority, to love as myself; the latter, I should ever consider as inimical to the honor of God, as unfriendly to my neighbor's happiness, and therefore discourage it, in the exercise of a Christian temper, through the whole of my conduct.—I freely allow that a mistake which relates merely to the mode and subject of baptism, is comparatively small; but still, while

* Works, Vol. II. p. 766, 773, 775

I consider the aspersion of infants as a human invention in the solemn service of God, I am bound to enter my protest against it; and by a uniform practice to shew, that I am a Baptist—the same when a Pædobaptist brother desires communion with me, as when one of my own persuasion makes a similar request. Thus proving that I act, not under the impulse of passion, but on a dictate of judgment: and then the most violent Pædobaptist opponents will have no shadow of reason to impeach my integrity;—no pretence for surmising, that when I give the right hand of fellowship to such as have been immersed on a profession of faith, I act on principles of conscience; but that when admitting such to communion who have been only sprinkled, I act on motives of convenience. Though some of our Pædobaptist brethren would urge us to open communion as being candid and catholic, some even of themselves view the subject very differently.—A Pædobaptist, when remonstrating against the conduct of some Independent churches, that received Baptists into communion with them, says; ‘Let men pretend what they can for such a hotch-potch communion in their churches, I steadfastly believe the event and issue of such practices will, sooner or later, convince all gainsayers, that it neither pleaseth Christ, nor is any way promotive of true peace or gospel holiness in the churches of God’s people.—I shall never be reconciled to that charity, which, in pretence of peace and moderation, opens the church’s door to church-disjointing principles.’ And he entitles his performance, “The sin and danger of admitting Anabaptists to continue in the Congregational churches, and the inconsistency of such a practice with the principles of both.”*

Here one can hardly avoid observing the very peculiar treatment which the Baptists in general meet from their Pædobaptist brethren. Do we strictly abide by our own principles, admitting none to communion with us, but those whom we consider as baptized believers? We are censured by many of them as uncharitably rigid, and are called by one gentlemant watery bigots. Do any of our denomination, under a plea of catholicism, depart from their avowed sentiments, and connive at infant sprinkling?—They are suspected, by others of the Pædobaptists, as a set of temporizers. So that like those unhappy persons who fell into the hands of Procrustes, some of us are too short, and we must be stretched; others are too long, and they must be lopped.—But I return to my argument.

* In Crosby’s Hist. Bap. Vol. III. page 45, 46, 47.

It should be observed, that forbearance and love, not less than resolution and zeal, must be directed in the whole extent of their exercise, by the word of God; else we may greatly offend, and become partakers of other men's sins, by conniving when we ought to reprove. If the divine precepts, relating to love and forbearance, will apply to the case in hand; or so as to justify our connivance at an alteration, a corruption, or an omission of baptism; they will do the same in regard to the Lord's supper.—And then we are bound to bear with sincere Papists, in their mutilation of the latter; and to exculpate our upright friends the Quakers, in their opposition to both. For it cannot be proved that baptism is less fundamental than the sacred supper.—‘There is a false, ungodly charity,’ says a sensible Pædobaptist writer, ‘a strange fire, that proceeds not from the Lord; a charity that gives up the honor of religion, merely because we will not be at the pains to defend it—Vile principles can easily cover themselves with the names of temper, charity, moderation, and forbearance; but those glorious things are not to be confounded with lukewarmness, self-seeking, laziness, or ignorance—As there is a cloak of covetousness, so there is a cloak of fear and cowardice—You are never to make peace with men at the expence of any truth, that is revealed to you by the great God; because that is offering up his glory in sacrifice to your own—Do not dismember the Christian religion, but take it all together: charity was never designed to be the tool of unbelief. See how the Spirit has connected both our principles and duties. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.*—‘I know not that man in England,’ says Dr. Owen, ‘who is willing to go farther in forbearance, love, and communion with all that fear God, and hold the foundation, than I am: but this is never to be done by a condescension from the exactness of the least apex of gospel truth.’†

Another Pædobaptist author, when treating on charity and forbearance, expresses himself in the following language: ‘A considerable succedaneum for the Christian unity, is the catholic charity; which is like the charity commended by Paul in only this one circumstance, that it “groweth exceedingly”—Among the stricter sort, it goes chiefly under the name of forbearance. We shall be much mistaken if we think that by this soft and agreeable word, is chiefly meant the tenderness and compassion inculcated by the precepts of Jesus Christ and his apostles. It strictly means, an agreement to differ quietly about the doctrines and commandments of the gospel, without interruption of visible fellowship. They distinguish carefully between fundamentals, or things necessary to be believed and practised; and circumstantials, or things that are indifferent. Now whatever foundation there may be for such a distinction in human systems of religion; it certainly looks very ill-becoming in the churches of Christ, to question how far he is to be believed and obeyed.‡ That illegitimate charity and false moderation, which incline professors to treat divine institutions as articles of small importance, led Melancthon, to place the doctrine of justification by faith alone, the number of positive institutions in the Christian church, the jurisdiction claimed by the Pope, and several superstitious rites of the Romish religion, among things indifferent, when an imperial edict required compliance.§ But, ‘as we must take heed that we do not add the fancies of men to our divine religion, so we should take equal care that we

* Mr. Bradbury’s Duty and Doct. of Bap. p. 201, 213, 214 do not curtail the appointments of Christ,* out of any pretence to candor.

† In Mr. Bradbury, as before, p. 198.

‡ Strictures on Modern Simony.

§ Mosheim’s Eccles. Hist. Vol. IV. p. 37, 38.

Once more : Remarkably strong, are the words of Mr. John Wesley, which are quoted with approbation by Mr. Rowland Hill. 'A catholic spirit is not speculative latitudinarianism. It is not an indifference to all opinions. This is the spawn of hell ; not the offspring of heaven. This unsettledness of thought, this being driven to and fro, and tossed about with every wind of doctrine, is a great curse, not a blessing ; an irreconcilable enemy, not a true catholicism.—A man of a true catholic spirit does not halt between two opinions, nor vainly endeavors to blend them into one. Observe this, you that know not what spirit you are of ; who call yourselves of a catholic spirit, only because you are of a muddy understanding ; because your mind is all in a mist ; because you are of no settled, consistent principles, but are for jumbling all opinions together.†

Our brethren with an air of superior confidence often demand, 'What have we to do with another's baptism?' This interrogatory I would answer by proposing another : What have I to do with another's faith, experience, or practice? In one view, nothing at all, if he do not injure my person, character, or property ; for to his own master he stands or falls. In another, much ; that is, if he desire communion with me at the Lord's table. After believing, baptism is the first, the very first that requires a public act of obedience. But he says 'I have been baptized.' Perhaps not. Make it appear, however, and I shall say no more on that subject.—'I am really persuaded of it in my own mind. Were it otherwise, I should not hesitate a moment to be immersed on a profession of faith. I am persuaded Christ has accepted me, and that it is my duty to receive the holy supper.' That Christ has received you, I have a pleasing persuasion ; and so I conclude, in a judgment of charity, concerning all whom I baptize : but that it is the immediate duty of any unbaptized believer to approach the Lord's table, I cannot perceive ; the general practice of the Christian church in every age, has been in the negative. A learned writer assures us, that 'among all the absurdities that ever were held, none ever maintained that, that any person should partake of the communion before he was baptized.' Christ commands believers to remember him at his own table. But were those believers to whom he first gave the command unbaptized? Or, can we infer, because it is the duty of all baptized believers to celebrate the Lord's supper, that it is the immediate duty of one that is not baptized, so to do?—Suppose a Jew, a Turk, or a Pagan, to be enlightened by divine grace, to have the truth as it is in Jesus, to love God and desire communion with his people before he is baptized ; would you think it right, could your own conscience admit of it, as consistent with the revealed will of Christ and the practice of his apostles, that such a request should be granted by any gospel church? In a case of this kind, I presume,—and there have been millions of Jews and Heathens converted, since the Christian era commenced,—in such a case you would easily discern a consistency between loving him as a believer, and refusing to have communion with him till he was baptized. Nay, I cannot help thinking, but you would be startled at the report of any religious community admitting such an one to the Lord's table ; because it would strike you as a notorious departure from the divine rule of proceeding, from the laws and statutes of Heaven in that case made and provided. Besides, you have already acknowledged, that if you did not consider yourself as baptized, if you thought immersion on a profession of faith essential to baptism, which you very well know is my sentiment, you should think it your duty to submit, you would not hesitate a moment. So that, were I to encourage your immediate approach to the sacred supper, I should stand condemned on your own principles.

* Dr. Watt's Humble Attempt, p. 62.

† In Mr. Rowland Hill's Full Answer to Mr. J. Wesley's Remarks, p. 40, 41.

This, then, is the only question between us, what is baptism? For you dare not assert, you cannot suppose, that an unbaptized believer, descended from Christian parents, has any pre-eminence, in point of claim to communion, above a truly converted Jew : and you must allow that I have an equal right with you, or any other man, to judge for myself what is essential to baptism. You verily believe that you have been baptized ; I am equally confident, from your own account of the matter, that you have not. Your conscience opposes the thought of being immersed on a profession of faith, because, in your opinion, it would be rebaptization ; mine cannot encourage your approach to the Lord's table, because I consider infant baptism as invalid.—Now I appeal to the reader, I appeal to our brethren themselves, whether, on our Antipædobaptist principles, we are not obliged to consider a truly converted but unbaptized Mussulman and a converted Englishman, who has had no other than pædobaptism, as on a level in point of communion with us ? For God is no respecter of persons. It is no matter where a man was born, or how he was educated ; whether he drew his first breath at Constantinople, or Peking, or London ; whether his parents taught him to revere the Koran of Mahomet, the Institutes of Confucius, or the Revelation of God ; if he really be born of the Spirit he has an equal claim to all the privileges of a gospel church, with a true convert descended from Christian ancestors. And if so, while our brethren abide by their present hypothesis, they could not refuse the sacred supper to the one, any more than the other, without the most palpable inconsistency ; though, by admitting the former to that divine appointment, they would surprise and offend all that heard of it.

But, notwithstanding all I have said, we stand charged by our brethren with a notorious inconsistency in our own conduct ; because we admit Pædobaptist ministers into our pulpits, to whom we should refuse communion at the Lord's table.

The first thing, that demands regard, is the state of the question which is now before us. The point in dispute is, whether baptism be equally necessary to the occasional exercise of ministerial gifts, as it is to communion at the Lord's table? and, whether the scripture favor the one as much as the other?

Such being the state of the question, I beg leave to ask; Supposing our brethren to prove the affirmative beyond a doubt, what is the consequence, and how are we affected by it? Is it, that we are found guilty of a direct violation of some divine command, that requires us to receive Pædobaptists into our communion? This is not pretended. Is it, that we oppose some plain apostolic precedent? neither is this laid to our charge. What, then, is the conclusion they would infer? It must, surely, be something formidable to every Baptist; otherwise it is hardly supposable that so much weight should be laid upon this objection. The consequence, however, is only this; The Baptists, are not infallible and do actually err. So soon as our brethren shall make it appear, that they have as good a warrant for receiving Pædobaptist believers into stated communion, as I have to admit a Pædobaptist minister occasionally into my pulpit, I will either encourage the former, or entirely refuse the latter.

But is there no difference between occasionally admitting Pædobaptist ministers into our pulpits, and receiving them or others of the same persuasion, into our communion? Public preaching is not confined to persons related in a church state, nor ever was; but the Lord's supper is a church ordinance, nor ought ever to be administered but to a particular church, as such. Now it is of a particular church, and of a positive ordinance peculiar to it, concerning which is all our dispute.—There is not that strict mutual relation between hearers of the word and the preacher, as there is between the members of a church and her pastor, or between the members themselves. And as, according to the appointment of God, persons must believe the gospel before they have any thing to do with positive institutions; so, in the ordinary course of Providence, they must hear the gospel in order to their believing. The Corinthians heard before they believed; they believed before they were baptized; and, no doubt, they were baptized before they received the sacred supper. (Acts xviii. 8) Were we to receive Pædobaptists into our fellowship, we should practically allow what we consider a human invention, to supersede a divine institution; not so, when we admit ministers of that persuasion into our pulpits. In this case there is no divine institution superseded; no human invention, in the worship of God, encouraged.—Again: when we admit Pædobaptist ministers into our pulpits, it is in expectation that they will preach the gospel; that very gospel which we believe and love, and about which there is no difference between them and us. But to receive Pædobaptists into communion, would be openly to connive at an error; an error both in judgment and practice; an error of that kind which the scripture calls, “will-worship, and the traditions of men.” There is, undoubtedly, a material difference, between hearing a minister who, in our judgment, is ignorant of the only true baptism, discourse on those doctrines he experimentally knows, and countenancing an invention of men. In the former case we shew an esteem for his personal talents, we honor his ministerial gifts, and manifest our love to the truth; in the latter, we set aside a divinely appointed prerequisite for communion at the Lord’s table.

It has been a fact, that persons have been called by grace, who were not baptized in their infancy; and who, considering baptism as a temporary institution, have conscientiously refused a submission to that ordinance and yet desired communion in the holy supper. Now suppose a community of such; and that they call to the ministry one of their number, who is allowed by all competent judges, to possess great ministerial gifts, and to be a very useful preacher:—or suppose a reformed Catholic, equally the subject of divine grace, and endued with equal abilities for public service, yet conscientiously retaining the Popish error of communion in one kind only. Now, on either of these suppositions, I demand of our Pædobaptist brethren, whether they would receive such an one into communion with the same readiness that they would admit him into their pulpits? If they answer in the negative, then we may retort upon them, shall an excellent, laborious and useful minister of Christ work for you, and shall he not be allowed to eat with you! What, shall he break the bread of life to you, and must he not be suffered to break bread at the Lord's table with you!

Though, as Baptists, it cannot be expected, that we should produce instances out of the New Testament, of Pædobaptist ministers being encouraged in a similar way; because we are firmly persuaded there were none such till after the sacred canon was completed: yet we find in that inspired volume, a sufficient warrant for uniting with those that believe, in affection and walk, so far as agreed; notwithstanding their ignorance of some part of the counsel of God, to which a conscientious obedience is indispensably required from all those by whom it is known. (Philip iii. 15, 16.) Yes, the New Testament not only permits as lawful, but enjoins as an indispensable duty, that we should love them that love the Lord; and that we should manifest this holy affection in every way, that is not inconsistent with a revelation of the divine will in some other respect. So it was under the Jewish economy, and so it is now. To admit, therefore, a minister to preach among us, with whom we should have no objection to commune, could we allow the validity of infant baptism; as it is a token of our affection for a servant of Christ, of our love to the truth he preaches, and is not contrary to any part of divine revelation, must be lawful: or if not, it lies with our brethren to prove it; because they cannot deny that the word of God requires us to love him, and to manifest our affection for him. When we ask a Pædobaptist minister to preach in any of our churches, we act on the same general principle, as when we request him to pray with any of us in a private family. And as no one considers this as an act of church communion, but as a testimony of our affection for him, so we consider that; and it is viewed by the public as a branch of the general intercourse, which it is not only lawful, but commendable and profitable to have with all that preach the gospel.

I take it for granted, that circumcision was absolutely necessary for every male, in order to communion at the paschal supper, and in the solemn worship of the sanctuary. And if so, had the most renowned antediluvians that ever lived, or the most illustrious Gentiles that ever appeared in the world, been cotemporary with Moses and sojourners in the same wilderness, they could not have been admitted to communion in the Israelitish church, without submitting to circumcision. Enoch, though as a saint he walked with God; though as a prophet he foretold the coming of Christ to judgment—Noah, though an heir of the righteousness of faith, a preacher of that righteousness, and one of Ezekiel's worthies, (Chap. xiv. 14, 16, 18, 20.)—Melchisedek, though a king, and a priest of the most high God; superior to Abraham, and the greatest personal type of the Lord Messiah that ever was among men—and Job, though for piety there was none like him upon earth—these I say, notwithstanding all their piety and holiness, notwithstanding all their shining excellences, exalted characters, and useful services, could not have been admitted to communion with the chosen tribes at the tabernacle of the God of Israel, without a violation of the divine command. This, I persuade myself, our opponents must allow: this, I think, they dare not deny. Yet if Enoch, had been in the camp of Israel when Korah and his company mutinied, and had been disposed to give the rebels a lecture on the second coming of Christ, I cannot suppose that his offered service would have been rejected by Moses or Joshua, merely because he was not circumcised. Or, if Noah had been present at the erection of the tabernacle, and inclined to give the people a sermon on the future incarnation of the Son of God, and the righteousness of faith, to which objects that structure, with its costly utensils and solemn services, had a typical regard, I cannot but think they would have given him a hearing. Nay, I appeal to our opponents themselves, whether they do not think so as well as I. Yet that favored people could not have admitted them to communion in some other branches of divine worship, without transgressing the laws of Jehovah. (Exod. xii. 44, 48. Ezek. xliv. 7.) If this be allowed, the consequence is plain, and the argument, though analogical, is irrefragable. For the paschal feast and the sanctuary services were not more of a positive nature than the Lord's supper; nor were the former more peculiar to that dispensation than the latter is to this; but preaching and hearing the word are not peculiar to any dispensation of grace, as are baptism and the sacred supper.

Our Lord, though he warned his hearers against the pride and hypocrisy, the unbelief and covetousness, of the ancient Pharisees, and Scribes, and Jewish teachers; yet exhorted the people to regard the truths they delivered. (Matt. xxiii. 1, 2, 3.) When the beloved disciple said, "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbid him, because he followeth not with us:" Jesus answered, "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us, is for us." (Luke ix. 49, 50.) From which it appears, that we are under obligation to encourage those that fight against the common enemy, and propagate the common truth; though they and we may have no communion together, in the ordinances of God's house.

Once more: A very competent judge of all that pertains to the ministerial character, and of all that belongs to a Christian profession, has left his opinion on record concerning the ministry of certain persons, whom he considered as quite unworthy of his intimate friendship. Even Paul, when acting as amanuensis to the Spirit of wisdom, speaking of some who preached the gospel, informs us, that envy and strife were the principles on which they acted, and the increase of his afflictions the end which they had in view. How carnal and base the principles! How detestable the end at which they aimed!—But was the apostle offended or grieved, so as to wish they were silenced? Or, did he charge his beloved Philippians, and all the sincere followers of Christ, never to hear them? Let his own declaration answer the queries. "What then? notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and therein I do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Philip. i. 15—18.) When a corrupted gospel is preached, he asserts his apostolic authority, and thunders out anathemas against the propagators of it. (Gal. i. 6—9.) Because, as God will not set the seal of his blessing to a falsehood, or sanctify a lie, it can do no good; it is pregnant with mischief. But when the pure gospel is preached, though from perverse motives, it is the truth, and God frequently owns and renders it useful. Hence the apostle's joy in the text before us.—Now, as we are far from impeaching the sincerity of our Pædobaptist brethren, when preaching the gospel of our ascended Lord; and as Paul rejoiced that Christ was preached, though by persons who acted on the basest principles; we cannot imagine that he would have taken less pleasure in the thought of Pædobaptist ministers publishing the glorious gospel of the blessed God, had there been any such in those days, even though he might have considered them as under a great mistake, in regard to baptism: And if so, we may safely conclude, that there is nothing inconsistent with our hypothesis, in occasionally admitting Pædobaptist ministers into our pulpits, and hearing them with pleasure.—But will our opponents assert, or can they suppose, that the great apostle of the Gentiles would have encouraged with equal delight such persons as those of whom he speaks, to approach the holy table and have communion with him in all the ordinances of God's house? Persons, who made the glorious gospel of the blessed God the vehicle of their own pride, and envy, and malice; and in whose conduct those infernal tempers reigned, and had for their immediate object one of the most excellent and useful men that ever lived? Certainly, if on any occasion, we may here adopt the old proverb; Credat Judæus appella.

It is with peculiar pleasure, on this occasion, that I introduce the following pertinent passage from a little publication written by Mr. John Ryland. His words are these: 'Dr. Daniel Waterland justly observes, that the true doctrine of the Trinity and the atonement of Christ, have been kept up in the Christian church, by the institutions of baptism and the Lord's supper, more than by any other means whatsoever; and, humanly speaking, these glorious truths, which are essential to salvation, would have been lost long ago, if the two positive institutions had been totally neglected and disused amongst professors of Christianity. In this point of view, baptism and the Lord's supper appear to be of unspeakable importance to the glory of God, and the very being of the true church of Christ on earth."*—Again: In another little piece, to which I have already referred, and of which the same worthy minister of Jesus Christ has expressed his approbation in more ways than one, though it does not bear his name, I find the following strong assertions relating to the importance and utility of baptism: "It is highly incumbent on all that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and are glad to behold their Saviour in every view in which he is pleased to reveal himself, to consider the dignity and glory of his holy institutions. These last legacies of a dying Saviour, these pledges of his eternal and immutable love, ought to be received with the greatest reverence and the warmest gratitude. And as they directly relate to the death of the great Redeemer, which is an event the most interesting, an action the most grand and noble that ever appeared in the world, they ought to be held in the highest esteem, and performed with the utmost solemnity. Of these institutions, baptism calls for our first regard, as it is appointed to be first performed: and however lightly the inconsiderate part of mankind may affect to treat this ordinance, it ought to be remembered, that Christ himself considered it and submitted to it, as an important part of that righteousness which it became even the Son of God to fulfil. As this ordinance is to be once performed, and not repeated, every Christian ought to be particularly careful that it is done in a right manner; or the benefit arising to the soul from this institution is lost, and lost forever. We ought with the utmost deliberation and care to consider—its own native dignity, as an action of the positive or ritual kind, the most great and noble in itself, and well pleasing to God, that it is possible for us to perform on this side heaven.—In this action, Christians, you behold the counsel of God; it is the result of his wise and eternal purpose; it is clearly commanded in his word; it is enforced by his own example; and honored in the most distinguished and wonderful manner, by every Person in the adorable Trinity. This ordinance is no trivial affair; it is no mean thing; and whoever is so unhappy as to despise it, wants eyes to see its beauty and excellency.—Our great Redeemer seems to have designed this ordinance as a test of our sincerity, and to distinguish his followers from the rest of mankind. As a captain who, to try a new soldier, employs him at first in some arduous and important service; so our Saviour, to try his own work, and to make the reality of his powerful grace in the hearts of his people manifest to themselves and to the world, calls them out at first to a great and singular action, and requires their submission to an institution that is disgusting to their nature and mortifying to their pride.”

* Beauty of Social Religion, p. 10.

The pamphlet, from which these extracts are made, speaks of baptism, “As an act of sublime worship to the adorable persons in the Godhead—As a representation of the sufferings of Christ, his death, burial, and resurrection—As the answer of a good conscience towards God—As an emblem of regeneration and sanctification—As a powerful obligation to newness of life—And as a lively figure of the natural death of every Christian.”*

Mr. Daniel Turner has also borne his testimony to the usefulness and importance of baptism. For, speaking of that ordinance, he says: “Christ himself submitted to this rite, as administered by John; not indeed with the same views, or to the same ends, with others; but as pointing out by his example, the duty of Christians in general. He also gave his ministers a commission and order, to baptize all the nations they taught.—It appears that being baptized, was the common token of subjection to Christ, and necessary to a regular entrance into his visible church. And, when describing the qualifications of those that are to be received into communion, he says; 'They should be acquainted with the chief design of the rites and positive institutions of Christianity, and reverently use them; viz. baptism, and the Lord's supper.' Once more: Speaking of that respect which the two positive appointments have to visible fellowship among believers, he says; 'Baptism, indeed, by which we are first formally incorporated into the visible church, or body of Christ, is the beginning and foundation of this external communion: but the Lord's supper is best adapted for the constant support and continual manifestation of it.* Nay, he mentions 'the reverent use of the two sacraments, among those things which are essential to the constitution of a particular visible church.†

* Six Views of Believers' Baptism, p. 1, 2, 3, 15.

Those who argue against us in this matter are continually calling baptism a non-essential, an external rite, a shadow, an outward form, &c. The Lord's supper, however, is considered and treated by them in a different manner; for they speak of it as a delightful, an edifying, an important institution. But what authority have they for thus distinguishing between two appointments of the same Lord, intended for the same persons, of equal continuance in the Christian church, and alike required of proper subjects? They have, indeed, the example of some Socinians, and the venerable sanction of the whole Council of Trent. For the title of one chapter in the records of that Council, is; 'Concerning the excellence of the most holy Eucharist, above the rest of the sacraments.‡ But as a good old Protestant writer observes, 'That the one sacrament should be so much extolled above the other, namely, the Lord's supper to be preferred before baptism, as the more worthy and excellent sacrament, we find no such thing in the word of God; but that both of them are of like dignity in themselves, and to be had equally in most high account.§ Nay, Mr. Ryland assures us, 'That baptism ought to be con-

* Compend. Social Religion, p. 27. (Note;) and p. 63, 120. (Note.)

† See p. 5. Note.

‡ Council. Trident. Sess. XIII. Chap. III

§ Willet's Synops. Papismi, p. 556, 557.

sidered as glorious an act of worship, *as ever was instituted by God.—Might not the Jews of old have distinguished, with equal propriety, between circumcision and the paschal supper? Does it become us to form comparisons between the positive appointments of our Eternal Sovereign, in regard to their importance; and that with a view to dispense with either of them, while the very same authority enjoins the one as well as the other? Can such a conduct be pious, humble, or rational? Is it not something like being “partial in God’s law,” for which the ancient priests were severely censured? Or, shall we say of our obedience to God, as he says to the mighty ocean; “Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further?”

But supposing it is evident, that baptism is much inferior to the sacred supper in point of importance; yet, while it is an ordinance of God, it has an equal claim on our obedience. For it is not the degree of excellence or utility of any divine appointment, that is the true reason of our submission to it; but the authority of Him that commands. “It hath been ever God’s wont,” says Bishop Hall, “by small precepts to prove men’s dispositions. Obedience is as well tried in a trifle, as in the most important charge: yea, so much more, as the thing required is less: for oftentimes those who would be careful in main affairs, think they may neglect the smallest. What command soever we receive from God, or our superiors, we must not scan the weight of the thing, but the authority of the commander. Either difficulty, or slightness, are vain pretences for disobedience.”† Nay, even Dr. Priestley, though remarkable for his liberal sentiments and rational way of thinking, and far from ascribing too much to God’s dominion over the subjects of his moral government; yet strongly asserts Jehovah’s prerogative in this respect. These are his words; ‘Every divine command ought certainly to be implicitly complied with, even though we should not be able to discern the reason of it.’ And has not He who is God over all blessed forever, said; “Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven?" As in the great concerns of religious worship, nothing should be done that is not required by Jehovah: and as the lawfulness of all positive rites depends entirely on their divine Author and his institutions; so he who complies with some, and neglects others that are equally commanded and equally known, may please himself, but does not obey the Lord.

* Beauty of Social Religion, p. 9.

† Contemplations, Vol. III. p. 274. Edinb. Edit.

Further: These depreciating expressions, non-essential, external rite, a shadow, and a mere outward form, may be applied to the sacred supper with as much propriety as to baptism. Are not bread and wine external things, as well as water? And has not the act of baptizing as much spirituality in it, as the acts of eating and drinking? Besides, an apostle has assured us, that "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink," though the latter were the richest of cordials, any more than it is immersion in water.*

Once more: When I consider how much more frequently baptism is mentioned in the New Testament, than the sacred supper; † how often repenting and believing sinners are exhorted, by the apostles, to be baptized; how soon that ordinance was administered to Christian converts after they believed; what exhortations are given to professing Christians, on the ground of their being baptized; and when I reflect, that the Holy Spirit commends them that were baptized by John, as "justifying God:" while he severely censures others, as "rejecting the counsel of God against themselves," because they slighted the solemn appointment; I cannot but wonder at the depreciating language of our opponents in regard to baptism. — Their very singular conduct appears to me still more extraordinary, and yet more unwarrantable, when I reflect that baptism is a divine institution to which a believer submits but once, and a branch of divine worship that he is required to perform but once; in which respect it greatly differs from every other appointment in the worship of God, under the Christian economy. For, this being the case, one should have imagined, if notorious and stubborn facts had not forbidden the thought; that every minister of Jesus Christ, and every church of the living God, would insist on a submission to what they consider as real baptism, in all whom they admit to the Lord's table. Dr. Ryland's words are, I think, none too strong when he says, (Beauty of Social Religion p. 9.) 'Baptism ought to be considered as glorious an act of worship as ever was instituted by God. It is to be performed but once in the life of a Christian—but once to eternity; and therefore, it ought to be done with the utmost veneration and love.'

* Vid. Hoornbeck ut supra, p. 362.

† Hoornbeck. ut supra, p. 409, 416.

SECTION VI.

Reflections.

It appears from the foregoing pages, that we act on a principle received in common by Christians of almost every name, in every age, and in every nation. When, therefore, we are compared with professing Christians in general, we have no peculiar claim to the epithet strict. Nor can we be otherwise than strict, without violating our own principles, and contradicting our own practice. For we believe that all who have received the truth, should profess their faith in Jesus Christ and be baptized, and have the happiness, in this respect, of agreeing with our brethren. If we conclude, that a believer is no further obliged by any divine precept, or prohibition, than he sees and acknowledges the obligation, in regard to himself, then a believer who has been baptized may live all his days in the neglect of communion at the Lord's table, and stand acquitted of blame; and covetousness is no crime in thousands who bow at the shrine of Mammon; for there are comparatively few lovers of money, who acknowledge their guilt in that respect. Nay, on this principle it will follow, that the more ignorant any believer is, and the less tender his conscience, he is under so much the less obligation to obey the divine commands. But the reader will do well to remember, that it is not our conviction of the propriety, the utility, or the necessity of any command which God has given, that entitles him to the performance of it; but, in all things of a moral nature, our being rational creatures is the ground of his claim; and in those of a positive kind, our being qualified according to his direction, whether we be so wise and so sincere as to acknowledge the obligation or no. Thus it appears that the epithet strict, if taken in the sense already explained, is no dishonor to us.

But if, on the contrary, our brethren mean by the epithet, that we are bigotted, unnecessarily exact, unscripturally confined; their forwardness to give us this name calls for our censure. In the former sense, I will venture to affirm, every Baptist ought to be a strict one, or else to renounce the name. In the latter use of the term, we reject the distinguishing epithet, and require our opponents to prove—I say to prove, not to surmise, that it justly belongs to us.

Our character, then, is fixed. Their own pens have engrossed it. And, be it known to all men, we are Strict Baptists. To this character, as before explained, we subscribe with hand and heart, in the last words of the celebrated Father Paul, Esto perpetua.

Many of my readers know that our Pædobaptist brethren, when they have a mind to shew their wit and be a little merry at our expense, represent the Baptists, without distinction, as exceedingly fond of water; as professors that cannot live in a church state, without a great deal of water. Nay, one of them has very politely called us 'watery bigots;' and then adds, 'Many ignorant sprinkled Christians are often, to their hurt, pulled by them into the water.'* According to this gentleman, then, we are watery bigots. Well, it does not greatly distress me to be thus represented by a sneering antagonist, because I really believe that much water is necessary to baptism, and am no less confident, that baptism is necessary to communion at the Lord's table.

And now, before I conclude, our brethren will suffer me also to remonstrate; and the reader may rest assured, that I do it without the least impeachment of their integrity—If infant sprinkling be a human invention, disown it, renounce it, entirely reject it, and no longer let it hold the place of a divine institution in any of your churches. For as there is but one God, and one faith, so there is but one baptism.

* Dr. Mayo's True Scripture Doctrine of Baptism, p. 33.

ON BIGOTRY.

BY B. H. DRAPER, SOUTHAMPTON, ENG.

THE subject of this tract is Bigotry. The object of the author is to define its real nature and essential properties and establish the criterion whereby it may be distinguished from genuine principle in the concerns of religion.

To accomplish this is confessedly somewhat difficult, as appears evident from the circumstance, that many persons of good general information, both in writing and conversation frequently use the term, without discrimination or propriety. On this account it is of great importance, since there is evidently such a thing as bigotry, accurately to define what it is; that so, wherever it appears, it may be known.

Bigotry, then, in matters of religion is, an unreasonable, unscriptural, and obstinate adherence to a party, or to sentiments, accompanied with oppressive and unjustifiable dispositions and conduct towards our fellow-creatures.

Bigotry has existed in every age of the world. It still exists, and is cherished among the very people who have boasted of its decease and its funeral. Epitaphs, in classical Latin, and some in plain English, have been written on the important and interesting occasion. I do not, however, find any inscription for its tomb, which is much more than a century old; nor am I aware, exactly how to account for this singular fact, but on the supposition, that, before this period, people had a greater sense of propriety than to write epitaphs for any beside the dead.

It is remarkable that all, even those who cherish Bigotry the most fondly, yet fully agree, that she is a most horrid monster; this indeed will be abundantly apparent, if we consider only for a moment what she is, and what she has done. Sometimes she has appeared unmasked, in all her native hideousness; false, and cruel, and detestable, kindling her accursed firebrands at the flames of hell, and with unsparing and relentless hand, scattering ruin and death through the finest portions of the habitable globe. At other times she has assumed the garb of an angel of light, and, with the fairest professions, she has reigned, whilst she seemed to have but little influence, and secretly, silently, and effectually accomplished her infernal purposes.

Bigotry, political, literary, and religious, exists among all ranks, and professions. In reference to religion alone it is now presented for our consideration. Infidels, under the specious veil of universal candour, have proved themselves the most execrable of bigots. In France, a few years since, the sun of revelation underwent a total eclipse; the very sabbath was abolished, and death was proclaimed to be an eternal sleep. Infidelity and atheism were indeed awfully triumphant; but instead of its promised candour, and boundless toleration, the most hideous bigotry, crimes of gigantic magnitude, and horrible and unheard of massacres, were indeed the order of the day. "Cruel," says one who had the best opportunities for obtaining the most correct information on the subject, "as the aspect of the former government of France had been to the servants of Christ, the little finger of the monster infidelity, was found to be thicker than its predecessor's loins. The mouth of every confessor of the truth was stopped. The religious meetings among the Protestants were forced to be discontinued, and every Protestant minister was compelled to abandon his station. The goddess of reason was exalted to be worshipped, and private libraries were ransacked and pillaged of their religious books. Every Bible which could be found was burnt. Good writings of the old Reformers, or distinguished Protestants, were preserved from the universal destruction, only by being buried in the ground. The people were compelled to work openly on the Sundays, and punished by law if they did not, in order, if possible, to obliterate every trace that remained of the sanctification of the Sabbath-day. Such was the liberal and tolerating spirit of the infidel philosophy."*

* Mr. Robt. Haldane's speech on the behalf of the Continental Society.

Indeed, a person who manifests any zeal for the diffusion of infidel sentiments, must necessarily possess a considerable degree of Bigotry. "The dominion of Christianity," says the eloquent Robert Hall, "being in the very essence of it, the dominion of virtue, we need look no farther for the sources of hostility in any who oppose it, than their attachment to vice and disorder."

Many have made large claims to the exclusive possession of that Christian candour, which is the opposite of Bigotry, whilst they have strenuously inculcated an entire and awful indifference to the truth. Whether Christ be truly divine, or merely man,—whether men are to be saved by the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus, or by their own imaginary or real virtues, are with them, matters of no great importance. To compliment one another, as being doubtless in the road to eternal bliss, though there may be no deadness to sin, no life to righteousness, no affectionate attachment to the Saviour, and no ardent love to his blessed commands, is all that is deemed necessary, provided the external conduct be somewhat decent and polite. This view of the subject is, however, grossly erroneous. Indifference to the truth does by no means necessarily imply freedom from Bigotry, and certainly is not Christian candour. A man may hold the truth of God with a firm hand, so as never to surrender a single particle of it, and yet be no Bigot. If conscientious, undeviating, and intrepid attachment to truth be bigotry, then Christ, his apostles, and the noble army of martyrs, were some of the worst bigots that have ever disgraced our world. The individual who dares follow the plain dictates of God's holy word wherever they may lead him, may, and most likely will, be derided as a Bigot; but he has done nothing for which he ought to be branded with this opprobrious epithet. The person who tells me, that Jesus is a mere fallible, peccable man,—that his blood has no peculiar merit in the sight of God, and has no connexion whatever with the remission of sin,—that disobedience to the divine commands is a trifling evil,—that we are at liberty to reject, modify, or treat with indifference, any even of the minor precepts of divine revelation,—and that, if I do not bow to his authority, and believe his assertions, I am a bigot,—excites in my bosom no emotions but those of pity. I would be far, however, very far, from doing, or even wishing any injury to such an individual; on the contrary, I would be sincerely concerned for his present and eternal welfare. But I would grasp my Bible, and tell him, that Jesus made the world, John i. 10.—that he was God, manifest in the flesh, 1 Tim. iii. 16.—that he was wounded for our transgressions, that the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all, Isa. liii. 5, 6.—that his blood cleanseth from all sin, 1 John i. 7.—that it is an evil and bitter thing to sin against God, and that the wages of sin is death, Rom. vi. 23.—and that he who shall break one of the least of Christ's commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven, Matt. v. 19. O no,—a firm attachment to the truth of God, as revealed in the Scriptures, is a noble principle, of divine origin, implanted in the human heart by God himself, and is indeed infinitely removed from that odious thing we justly denominate Bigotry.

It cannot excite wonder that a produce so corrupt as Bigotry, should be found on the malignant tree of infidelity; for no one can rationally expect “to gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles;” but that so hateful a production should be found among professing Christians, may indeed be justly regarded as matter of astonishment.—And yet, “Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the uncircumcised triumph,”—its dwelling is among the sons of God,—it has taken up its abode in the professing church,—there it appears

“in double shape,
Half is a murd'ring wolf, and half a mimic ape.”

Yes, lamentable to relate, it has been found, and still exists, among professing Christians of various denominations; and what is still more surprising, there have been, and there still are, even good men, and some of great name too,—(though certainly this is no part of their goodness,) who may, with but too much propriety, be justly charged with the abominable sin of Bigotry. But to be more particular, I remark,

That he who detests, or is evidently unfriendly to any person because he is not altogether of his opinion, is a bigot. A Christian ought to regard the whole of the human race as children of one common father, according to our Lord's instructions in the parable of the Good Samaritan, and to treat every one with kindness. When an individual virtually, if not really, stands up, and says, I expect every one to believe as I believe, and to affirm what I affirm, or I will avoid, proscribe, and persecute him, he should produce his authority for this monstrous claim; or he may reasonably expect to meet with unqualified and merited contempt. Such a disposition is entirely unsanctioned by Scripture, which enjoins us to love our neighbour as ourselves,—and by right reason also, since it is not doing to others as we would have them do to ourselves. Christianity, not that indeed of blind interested bigots, but the Christianity of the New Testament, is most emphatically, love. He cannot be a Christian, notwithstanding all his professions, who does not love his fellow-creatures.

The man who employs abusive or improper terms in defending his sentiments, though they may be just and scriptural, is chargeable with Bigotry. This practice was shamefully common about the time of the Reformation, and even among the principal Reformers. Luther, I think, rather excelled Calvin in this unenviable art, though Calvin was but too well skilled in it.* The Scriptures utterly discountenance such a practice. It is said, that Michael durst not bring a railing accusation even against Satan, but only said, "The Lord rebuke thee!" Our Lord declared that whosoever should call "his brother a fool, should be in danger of hell fire." And was not his glorious example in perfect harmony with his charming instructions? It was. "When reviled, he reviled not again,—when rebuked, he threatened not; but committed himself to him who judgeth righteously." Christianity needs not that such unhallowed weapons should be used in its defence. Its noblest and most successful champions have scorned to gird on any other armour, than such as is "lovely, and of good report." If the Bible be our guide, we shall be sincerely concerned to speak the truth in love. And if the dictates of reason influence us, instead of those of Bigotry, we shall never forget that, if we could collect all the abusive epithets that have ever been recorded, or even imagined, we might with the strictest propriety affirm, that collectively they prove nothing but our own depravity.

* The late Bishop Warburton, speaking of Mr. Romaine, says, "This is the scoundrel I wrote to, but the poor devil has done his own business."—Warburton's Letters.

The individuals, or parties, who anathematize all that are not of their own communion, are bigots. Our Lord's own disciples manifested somewhat of this unhallowed disposition, when they saw a person casting out devils, and they forbid him, for no better reason than this, because he followed not with them; the Saviour reproved them, and bade them recollect that "he who is not against us is for us." The Pharisees, with boundless pride and Bigotry, stood up, and said, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are we!" and boldly and impiously pronounced those who differed from them, or who were not possessed of their religious knowledge, accursed. The Roman Catholic church is notorious for its anathemas against all who are without its intolerant pale. The following is the language of one of its councils, and its conduct has ever been in unison with its professed sentiments: "Whosoever, therefore, is separated from the Catholic church, notwithstanding his conduct in other respects may be excellent, he shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."* A similar disposition and conduct has ever been manifested by all worldly establishments of religion. A large proportion of their adherents, with the most entire complacency, unite with the intolerant Daubeny in giving up the numerous millions who dissent from them, to use their own language,

* Quisquis ergo ab hac Catholica ecclesia fuerit separatus, quantumlibet laudabiliter se vivere existimet, non habebit vitam, sed ira Dei manet super eum. Conc. Numid. A. D. 412.

“to the uncovenanted mercies of God.” Such men seem to find a pleasure in cursing their fellow-creatures. Thus the old chancellor Tellier, in the reign of Louis XIV. earnestly entreated that the *most Christian king would hasten the revocation of the edict of Nantz, lest he should leave the world without the extatic pleasure of putting his seal to it. How an event that was to deprive two millions of people, and of his countrymen too, of their liberties, and of all that was most dear to them, and consign immense multitudes to captivity, and extreme torture, could afford any one enjoyment, it is indeed difficult to conceive. What a perversity, what an infatuation of understanding! what a depravity of heart! what monstrous cruelty! The Danish bishop, who wished to be transformed into a devil, that he might have the exquisite delight of tormenting in hell the heretic soul of king Frederick, appears indeed to have been a very near relative of this miserable individual.

This anathematizing spirit is in the highest degree mean, ungenerous, unrighteous and abominable, and is the very essence of Bigotry. Where is there any reason in cursing all who may differ from us in matters of comparatively inferior moment, when it is an unquestionable fact, that excellent men, real Christians, the friends of God and of the human race, have been found among all denominations of professing Christians, not even excepting the Roman Catholic community, obviously the most corrupt on the face of the earth? And assuredly the Scriptures do not in the smallest degree sanction this detestable conduct, since they affirm, and that too in the plainest manner, that those who repent of their transgressions, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and obey his commandments, shall, whether anathematized or not, be finally and eternally saved.

The Bigot very frequently expends his principal zeal on trivial things, whilst he neglects matters of the highest importance. This was evidently the case with the Pharisees; our Lord sharply reprovèd them on this account: "Wo," said he, "unto you Scribes and Pharisees! for ye pay tithè of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone. Ye blind guides! which strain at [out] a gnat, and swallow a camel!" Matt. xxiii. 23, 24.

* It is well remarked by R. Robinson, that “if right reason and religion were to compose a just title for such a man, it might call him, a most inhuman tyrant, certainly it would not call him ‘a most Christian king.’”

He is a Bigot, whose conduct makes it evident, that his chief aim is the establishment of a party, or the gratification of worldly dispositions, and not the furtherance of the truth. An individual of this class, and, unfortunately, it is very numerous, may be readily known by the following plain and infallible marks: he obstinately refuses to do any manner of good, however he may have it in his power, and whatever opportunities may be presented to him, out of his own community. Present to him a case for the support of schools in some part of the world, where the people are enveloped in the grossest superstition and darkness, and in which no books whatever, beside the New Testament, and an introductory primer, perfectly unexceptionable, are used, and he may admire your benevolence, and has nothing to say against the charity, but he cannot, that is, his excessive bigotry will not let him do a generous action—he cannot do any thing out of his church. Ask for his aid in the translation of the Scriptures for gratuitous distribution among the millions of the perishing heathen, and still, though it is exceedingly difficult to imagine how, in the remotest manner, his church could possibly be injured, he sings the same song, he cannot, no indeed he cannot, do any thing out of his church. Bigotry, unrelenting, downright Bigotry, seals his pocket up so closely, that no effort, however urgent and impressive, can open it, and steels his heart so impenetrably, that it is but rarely conscious of a single generous and compassionate feeling, towards the multitudes of his fellow-creatures who are immersed in wretchedness and barbarism.

Much praise is due to the liberality and kindness of many gentlemen, who, though not altogether agreeing with an applicant in every religious sentiment, have nevertheless freely and nobly contributed to the erection of places for the spread of the gospel, or the accommodation of Christian worship. It must, however, also be owned, that a very offensive spirit of Bigotry has been sometimes manifested on these occasions. When a minister, in reply to inquiry, has acknowledged that he belonged to the Baptist denomination, the very mention of the term has excited a torrent of abuse on the individual himself, and on the body of Christians to whom he has belonged. Now, is this doing as we would be done unto? Is not such a conduct a grievous sin even against common courtesy? Would not a well-bred individual, of no pretensions to piety, disdain such ungenerous conduct? And is a person to be justified, in regarding a respectable stranger, asking aid in the cause of Christ, with contempt or ill-treatment, because he has the courage to think for himself in matters of religion, and the honesty to avow that he does so? Does not the person who thus demeans himself, loudly say, "How dare you differ, even a single shade, from so distinguished a personage as myself?" Is this the spirit of Christianity? Is this a practical regard of his instructions, who bade the greatest in his family become the servant of all? It is no extenuation of the fault of such an individual, to say, that he is a man of consequence and wealth, and a very useful person. This is an aggravation of his guilt; for on these accounts it is more imperatively incumbent on him to adopt a line of conduct, at once amiable, conciliatory, liberal, and condescending. Such behaviour is both ungentlemanlike, and unchristian, and is the evident and most offensive offspring of Bigotry.

Another mark of the persons who are here alluded to, is, that they regard almost all kind of means as lawful that they think may tend to the establishment and prosperity of their party. Hence has arisen the manifold, pious, but detestable frauds of the Romish church. Thus persons of this class will zealously propagate gross calumnies, and oftentimes indeed invent, as well as give them currency. When an individual apostatizes from his profession, they assiduously

“Repröach a people with his single fall,
And cast his filthy rament at them all,”

Affirming, wherever they have opportunity, that all of the same community are equally vile. The mere stickler of a party has been known publicly and bitterly to inveigh against his brethren, who think it right to baptize on a profession of faith, and by immersion only; and at the same time in private, rather than have his party weakened, or lose a rich member of his own society, to administer that ordinance in his own habitation, and in the very manner too, which he has so vehemently arraigned.

The truly candid Christian, in opposition to the bigot, cleaves to the truth, and follows it wherever it may lead him. He dares to be honest to his conscience, notwithstanding many temptations to be otherwise. He rejoices in the extension of truth, among all denominations, and in every part of the habitable globe. His attachment is not to any party of Christians, as such, but to the truth. He holds it with a firm untrembling hand; and binds it joyfully to his heart, as one who has found great spoil, whether it is fashionable or not, whether men smile or frown, and whether they reward or punish him. He utterly disdains to serve a good cause by the base arts of low cunning, detestable falsehood, or impious malignity. He can stand erect, and say with Cowper,

“And truth alone, where'er my lot be cast,
'Midst scenes of plenty, or the pining waste, Shall be my chosen theme, my glory to the last.”

Dogmatically to decide on a subject, with a very slender knowledge of it, and without having diligently examined it, arises commonly from bigotry. How unreasonable is such a line of conduct: there can be no propriety in a man's decisions in reference to sentiments he has never investigated. The holy and liberal men who wrote the sacred volume, were not ecclesiastical tyrants; they wished their readers "to prove all things, and to hold fast that which is good;" and they have commended it as a noble disposition, not to believe any thing without examination, and a conviction of its truth. But a bigot expects and demands that you should receive his assertions for proofs. Thus the infidel Paine, affirmed that the Bible was unworthy of any attention, and that he had answered it before he had read it!

This disposition is often evident, not only in reference to opinions, but also to characters. Thus I recollect an individual who affirmed, that a minister in his neighbourhood was not a Calvinist. Somewhat surprised, I said, "Not a Calvinist! then, what is he?" "O, don't you know?—he is a Fullerite!" was the reply. Merely to ascertain whether he knew any thing of the subject, I said, "Indeed!—Will you have the kindness to mention some principles of Calvinism, which Mr. F. did not maintain?" "I shall not trouble myself to do this," said he—"but he was not a Calvinist—of that I am certain." "Well," I rejoined, "did you ever read his writings?" "O no," said he, "nor do I intend it; every one knows that he was no Calvinist." What can we call such a dogmatical spirit, and there is much of it in the world, but downright bigotry?

Pride, overbearing pride, is the inseparable companion of bigotry. Perhaps it may with propriety be affirmed that a man's pride is always in proportion to his bigotry. He who is clothed with humility can never manifest this unhallowed disposition. Leighton, though an arch-bishop, was not, and for this reason never could have been, a bigot. In reference to his kind, conciliating, and truly christian temper, I would indeed say, Let him be imitated.*

Bearing false witness, either in speaking or writing against those who differ from us in opinion, arises usually from bigotry. Instances of this kind are frequently occurring, and are lamentably numerous. Thus some individual, not long since, published an account of the miserable faction that disgraced and afflicted the town of Munster about the time of the Reformation, and called it a History of the Baptists, though he was well aware, that the Baptists of the present day have no principles in common with those wretched people. This was bearing false witness to serve party purposes.

* *Illum agit penna metuente solvi
Fama superstes.*

Professing to take the Bible as our sole guide in matters of religion, and yet refusing to submit to plain scriptural authority, commonly arises from Bigotry. Thus, when Dr. Priestly met with a passage in the Gospel by John, asserting the pre-existence of Christ, though he could not but acknowledge that this was the case, yet he would by no means admit the doctrine to be true. He would suppose, he says, that the apostle dictated one thing, and his amanuensis wrote another; or that John was superannuated, and did not know what he wrote; or, he would suppose any thing, and every thing, rather than give credit to the sentiment.* Thus also, a host of writers,† Bishop Saunderson,‡ Calvin,§ Bishop Burnet,|| and a multitude of others, of great name, have testified, and deliberately left their opinions on record, that there is no precept or example in the New Testament for infant baptism, and yet, with glaring inconsistency, continued to practise it. How can this be accounted for, but from a bigoted attachment to a creed, whether its sentiments are scriptural or not.

Those who would in any way whatever injure their fellow-creatures on account of their religious sentiments, are evidently some of the worst of Bigots. Thus all persecutors are justly chargeable with this detestable vice. Here, indeed, it is seen in all its native horrors, full grown, and as diabolical as gigantic. It may not, perhaps, be amiss to present a single specimen of its infernal labours. In reference to the Protestants in France, it is said, "The bloody butchers invented a thousand torments to tire their patience, and to force

* Magee on the Atonement, p. 85, 86.

† See an invaluable work, entitled, Pædobaptism Examined, by the venerable Abraham Booth. See also Pengilly's Scripture Guide to Baptism, Tract No. 45.

‡ De Oblig. Conscient. Prælect. iv. sect. 17, 18.

§ Instit. lib. 4 c. 16.

|| Expos of 39 Art. p. 306. Art. 27.

them to abjure their sentiments. They cast some into large fires, and took them out when they were half-roasted. They hanged others, with large ropes under their arm-pits, and plunged them several times into wells, till they promised to renounce their religion. They tied them like criminals to the rack, and poured wine, with a funnel, into their mouths, till, being intoxicated, they consented to turn Catholics. Some they slashed and cut with pen-knives, others they took by the nose with red-hot tongs, and led them up and down the room till they promised to turn Catholics.”*

No individual or community has a right to injure another in his good name, person, or substance, on account of his religious sentiments. God causes his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and his rain to descend on the thankful and on the unthankful. And if we are what we ought to be, and profess to be, real Christians, we shall strive to imitate our heavenly Father. It may be pointedly put to every persecutor, What hast thou to do with another man's servant? To his own master he stands or falls. Those who persecute, get into the throne of God, and take his sword of vengeance from his hands. What impious presumption! what boundless arrogance! Even Luther, and Calvin, and Cranmer, as well as other Reformers, who ought to have known better, on this account are justly to be censured. Is it the way to convince a man of the truth and excellence of Christianity, to seize his property, to afflict his person, or to immure him in a dungeon? Persecution has made tens of thousands of martyrs, and multitudes of hypocrites, but never one real Christian. If there be any passage in the New Testament which authorizes violence and injustice towards even the vilest of the human race, let it be produced. Every degree of persecution is a most outrageous wrong, and should meet with general and unqualified reprobation.

* Robinson's Hist. of the Reformation in France, prefixed to Vol. I. of Saurin's Sermons. If the reader would like to see one of the most affecting and interesting narratives of the same kind, that was ever penned, let him turn to Jones's History of the Waldenses. There indeed he will see the havoc that has been made by the monster Bigotry.

The great and illustrious Founder of Christianity, when his disciples wanted to call down fire from heaven to consume the Samaritans, rebuked them sharply, and justly said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of! The Son of man is come, not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Christianity, divine Christianity, the Christianity of the New Testament, and not that of persecuting statesmen and ecclesiastical tyrants, unrivalled in excellence and grandeur, every where gloriously breathes, and powerfully inculcates the animating and ennobling sentiments of the angelic hymn, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN." A man must trample on its plainest dictates, and become a most detestable bigot, before he can assume the character of a persecutor.

"I am sick of almost every thing," says the amiable Pearce, "that has been called religion, but love; supreme love to God, universal benevolence to man. I am enraptured at the thought, that all the objects which Christianity requires me to believe, are to be contemplated with delight. It is all love; love is the alpha, love is the omega. It originated in love. It is exemplified in love. It works by love. It terminates in perfect, universal love. Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift, this religion of love!"

Well, on all hands, Bigotry is allowed to be a most horrible evil, and to be wholly indefensible. But how shall it be cured? This is the all-important question. I know of but one effectual remedy—it is a large portion of the benevolent, devotional, Christ-like spirit which is every where inculcated in the New Testament. I never knew a person imbued with the spirit of the Saviour, filled with love to God, and to his fellow-creatures, (and this is the only religion of which God will approve, the religion indeed of the Bible, and which alone can make man happy,) who was a Bigot. Such an individual, in the whole of his deportment, must necessarily be a living display of that beautiful picture, drawn by a hand under the immediate guidance of all-inspiring heaven, which is in the thirteenth chapter of the first Epistle to the church at Corinth. This holy and divine temper is the very opposite to Bigotry. "It suffereth long, and is kind; it envieth not; vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own; is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity; but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things; believeth all things; hopeth all things; endureth all things." I am not surprised that he who drew this exquisite portrait, adds, "It never faileth!" This is indeed the grace ———"that lives and sings,

When faith and hope shall cease,
'Tis this shall strike our joyful strings,
In the sweet realms of bliss."

And unless we possess it, though we could speak with the tongues of men, and of angels, and had faith even to remove mountains, our professions of Christianity are vain,—we are "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

The criterion then by which the truly candid Christian may be distinguished from the Bigot is evident. The Bigot is notoriously wanting in love to his fellow-creatures—defends false, or even well-founded sentiments, in an unchristian spirit and temper—frequently anathematizes those who are not altogether of his own communion—often expends his principal zeal on comparatively trivial things, and pays very little attention to matters of the highest moment—aims at the establishment of a party, or the gratification of mere worldly dispositions, rather than the furtherance of the truth—proudly decides on a subject, and that too many times without having duly examined it—is not very scrupulous in reference to the means he employs against those who differ from him in opinion—professes to regard the Scriptures as his only guide in matters of religion, and yet in plain cases refuses to submit to their authority—and finally he cherishes the disposition to persecute, if he be not actually a persecutor.

The truly candid Christian, on the other hand, sincerely loves all his fellow-creatures, especially his fellow-christians, however they may differ from him in opinion. When he defends the truth, the law of kindness is on his lips and in his heart, and flows from his pen—he trembles at the thought of taking God's judgment-seat, and of cursing any of his fellow-christians—he rejoices in every part of divine truth, and holds it with a firm hand, but he is principally concerned for the vital doctrines of Christianity—he aims at the furtherance of the truth, and the glory of God, more than at the prosperity of any party whatever—he searches the Scriptures diligently, before he will decide on any important point, to see if the things affirmed are so, or not—scorns to serve even the truth by dishonest means—conscientiously follows the Bible wherever it leads him—and is sincerely and affectionately concerned for the present and everlasting welfare of the human race.

If I were to mention a single criterion by which Bigotry may be generally and immediately known, I would say, It is a want of that spirit of love which is every where inculcated by the New Testament, and which was delightfully exemplified in the character of our divine Redeemer, and his immediate disciples.

The time will indeed arrive, it is foretold in the sure page of prophecy, when “none shall hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain; when the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them;” then, and perhaps not till then, this monster shall die, and be buried. Happy day! glorious end! O that it were indeed already come! then, having witnessed the interment, I would not indeed write its epitaph, but flee afar

“The pois'nous steams, and stench of its sepulchre;
And lift my hands to heaven, and pray,—
That such a hateful creature never may,
At any time obtain a resurrection day.”

THE DUTY OF GIVING
CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION
TO CHILDREN.

A Letter written by IRAH CHASE; addressed, in 1831, by the Boston Association, and now by the Tract Society, to Parents and others connected with Baptist Churches.

Dear Brethren,—It is not to a novel subject, but to one which, nevertheless, must always possess a fresh and touching interest, that we now solicit your attention—THE DUTY OF GIVING CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION TO CHILDREN.

This duty is, in the first place, the dictate of reason and affection.

Reason requires that the ignorant be instructed. And the more important the knowledge, the stronger is the argument for its being communicated. And the greater our affection for the persons needing instruction, the more intense is our desire to have them instructed. Who does not pronounce it suitable that children be taught those things which may be useful to them in the present life? and who that loves his children does not desire to have them taught? Now, we take it for granted, that the knowledge of the Christian religion is more valuable than the knowledge of any other subject; for it fills the mind with the brightest conceptions of purity and benevolence; and it is connected with what has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. It is, then, most manifestly and most emphatically, the dictate of reason and affection, that Christian instruction be given to children.

Besides, this duty is clearly implied in the general direction to make the gospel known.

In the command of our Saviour, Preach the gospel to every creature, it is clear that he would have Christian instruction given to all who are capable of being instructed. The common sense of every man understands the direction as having reference to moral agents only, and to all moral agents belonging to the human family. The gospel is to be preached to all; and we are to encourage its ministers to go forth to instruct the most distant nations. Surely then, our own children are not to be neglected; but as soon as they can understand, they are to be taught the simple and affecting story of our redemption, the first principles of the oracles of God.

But further, the duty of giving Christian instruction to children, is expressly enjoined. The sacred Scriptures exhibit this duty in the most direct and positive manner: Provoke not your children to wrath, says an apostle, *but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Nurture is the more general term, indicating the education, or training up of children, which, we know, comprehends instruction and example, rewards and punishments, and whatever may be necessary in this work. Admonition, as here used, directs our attention particularly to the mind of the child, as that with which we have especially to do; and we are here taught that this nurture and admonition, or instilling into the mind, must be conformable to the Spirit and instructions of our Lord.

So clear and prominent is the duty. It is the manifest dictate of reason and affection; it is implied in the general direction to make the gospel known; and it is expressly enjoined. It rests, therefore, on an immovable foundation; and we need no other.

In view of these considerations, it is to be hoped that we shall all feel the force of the obligations that rest upon us. But it may be useful to mention some additional considerations by which also we should be urged to the performance of this duty.

*Eph 6: 4.

Consider the susceptibility of the mind in childhood.

This has always been proverbial. In childhood the mind has not the prejudices with which it is likely to be filled at a later period. It is more candid; and the impressions which it then receives, are the most likely to be permanent. The evil propensity has not become strengthened by long habits of thinking and acting in an unworthy and unchristian manner. The child exhibits a frankness, and deference, and docility, the most encouraging. And we know that if his mind be not early imbued with correct sentiments, it will be with false and pernicious ones.

Consider the effect on the community.

Children will be either blessings or curses to their parents and to the community. Think of a child brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. You may hope to see him dutiful to his parents, their delight and their glory. Follow him through the periods of youth and of manhood. What a salutary influence he exerts on all his companions! and what a profusion of benefits does he scatter around him, in whatever sphere he may move. 'Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it.'*

But, on the other hand, think of the unhappy child, that has not received Christian instruction. What can you expect but that he will be the grief of his mother? Destitute of Christian principle, he will be the easy victim of temptation. He corrupts the principles and habits of others. Or, if he does not absolutely become a pest in society, he at least fails of doing that amount of good which he might have been the honored instrument of accomplishing. Should he, at mature age, through the riches of divine grace, become truly religious, how will he deplore, that in childhood his Christian education was neglected, and that from a child he had not known the holy scriptures.

In a few years, the dearest interests of the community will be in the hands of those who are now children. How important that we do what we can to cause that the generation which shall arise, may be a generation to praise the Lord, and to diffuse throughout all the walks of life, a pure and happy influence.

* Prov. 22 : 6.

Consider the consequences beyond the grave.

If a child be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, there is reason to trust not only that this Christian instruction will have a good influence upon him in the present life, but also that it will be so blessed as to make him 'wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.*' But if a child grow up in ignorance and contempt of Christian truth and duty, there is an alarming probability not only that he will be worse than useless in this life, but also that he will die in his sins, and fall under the solemn declaration of the Saviour, Whither I go, ye cannot come.†

Most of those in a Christian land who have given evidence of having become truly pious, we have reason to believe, had some truths of the gospel deeply impressed on their minds at an early age. The seed of divine truth sown in the tender mind, may lie buried long, but we may hope it will not be lost.

Yes, for this we may hope and pray. How often has the recollection of truths affectionately inculcated in childhood, been brought afresh to the mind at a later period, with an overwhelming power. The tongue of the faithful parent may now be silent in the grave; and the eye that once beamed on the child with parental and Christian love, may now be seen no more; but the instruction, and the patience, and tender solicitude with which it was imparted, fill the soul of the hitherto careless wanderer with deep emotion, and become the most prominent among the means of his conversion to God.

In this view of the matter, there is, certainly, great encouragement, but there is still greater in another view which we are permitted to take. As connected with the truly Christian instruction of our children, we may hope, and we should hope, for their early conversion,—for their being brought even in early childhood, to a saving acquaintance with religion, to repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. Why should we not? The gospel is remarkable for its simplicity, a child may understand it; many a young child has understood it, so far as its first principles are concerned, and has felt its heavenly power, and given ample evidence of being truly regenerate.

* 2 Tim. 3: 15.

† John 8: 21, 22.

In the time of our Saviour, there were such children. And it is not improbable that he selected one of these, when he rebuked the ambitious contention of his disciples. On this occasion, according to the record of Matthew, 'Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me.*' In Luke, this last declaration is expressed thus: 'Whosoever shall receive this child in my name, receiveth me.†' And Matthew immediately adds the words of the Saviour, 'But whoso shall offend,' or cause to sin, one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.'

On another occasion, there were brought unto our Lord little children, that he should put his hands on them and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, 'Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.‡' 'Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God, as a little child, he shall not enter therein.§'

In these passages and the parallel ones, the original words rendered child, little ones, little children, and infants, may indicate children of such an age as to be capable of receiving religious instruction. This every one acquainted with the Greek, must know; and it has been abundantly shown by the ablest interpreters. Even the word which at first sight would here seem to be the most unfavorable to this representation, (the word in Luke rendered infants,) is the very word which the apostle Paul uses when he says to Timothy, 'From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures.'

* Matt. 18: 2-5. † Luke 9: 48. ‡ Matt. 19: 13, 14. § Mark 10: 15.

If, on these occasions of teaching humility to his disciples, our Lord directed their attention to children, on account merely of the simplicity and meekness which belong, in a remarkable degree, to children generally, his teaching was beautiful and impressive, and if he directed their attention to children, who besides possessing these qualities in common with other children, had received the truth in the love of it, his teaching was, certainly, still more beautiful and impressive.

That there were such children in his time, is evident from the 21st chapter of Matthew,* where it is stated: 'When the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, hosanna to the son of David, they were displeased, and said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, thou hast perfected praise?'

This is a quotation from the eighth Psalm, and, it being poetry, it is somewhat hyperbolical, according to the poetic manner; but the idea intended to be exhibited is perfectly manifest, namely, that God is pleased when young children feel his love, and utter his praise.

Instances of early piety have occurred in almost every age of the world; and they are not rare in our own country at the present time. Within the circle of our own observation, and particularly in those places where special attention has been paid to the subject of religion, many a striking and lovely example of this kind has presented itself; and we have been most happily taught the force of the passage which has just been repeated: Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, thou hast perfected praise. Indeed, there is abundant proof that genuine conversions may occur, and that they have occurred, at a very early period.

* Verses 15, 16

Why, then, we ask again, why should we not hope and labor, and pray for such a blessing in respect to our own children? And who can refuse thus to exert himself, when he thinks of the consequences which may ensue beyond the grave?

Consider the uncertainty of life.

There is uncertainty in respect to our own lives. Soon our children may be called to weep over our lifeless remains, and be left amidst the dangers of an ensnaring and sinful world. Ah! how can we answer for it, if we neglect the precious opportunities which we now enjoy for bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?

There is uncertainty in respect to their lives. How often does the loveliest blossom droop and fade away before our eyes! Shall not we do without delay what God himself has commanded us to do, in order that each, whenever removed, may be transplanted to his own garden on high?

We must remember, that, dear and lovely as our children may be, they need to be regenerated and saved through Jesus Christ; that all have sinned, and that, just so far as they are sinners, they need to repent, and to receive forgiveness through a child-like reliance on our condescending Lord. The time allotted them may be short. Death is almost daily entering some of our families; and none can tell either how soon, or how suddenly, any one of the dear children committed to our care may be torn away. Now is the precious opportunity of instructing their tender minds, and pointing them to the Lamb of God. The opportunity may soon be gone. How bitter must then be the remembrance of having neglected our duty! How sweet, the consolation of having faithfully performed it!

Christian instruction, as we have seen, must not only be given to children; but it must also be given in an affectionate and engaging manner.

'Provoke not,' says the apostle, 'provoke not your children to wrath.' This is, indeed, a general direction; and it is a most important admonition in respect to all our intercourse with children; but it applies, with peculiar force, to our efforts for their spiritual and eternal benefit. It teaches us to guard against a repulsive austerity and moroseness, and to let our whole manner of communicating instruction and admonition be the manifest dictate of love. While we present unadulterated Christian truth, we must endeavor to present it so affectionately as, if possible, to disarm the enmity of the natural heart. And we must let our little listeners clearly perceive not only that we love them, but that God loves them, and requires of them only what is necessary to their highest happiness. We must show them that it is the way of transgressors that is hard; but that 'the ways of wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.'

We must do our utmost to excite and keep up in the tender mind, a cheerful attention to the various things involved in a religious education. This is evident from a parallel passage, in the epistle to the Colossians,* where the apostle says expressly, 'Provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.' Clearly, then, we must, according to the circumstances in which we are placed, take those measures which are the best adapted to encourage our children in all that is right and useful, and especially in receiving Christian instruction.

The duty of giving such instruction is directly and explicitly enjoined upon parents; and they cannot be exonerated from performing it, so far as it may be in their power. Parents, it is most obvious, have peculiar advantages for influencing the minds of their children. And who that has the heart of a parent, does not ardently desire to be qualified for performing, in the happiest manner, so endearing and responsible a work? Who that has the heart of a parent, does not hear a voice from heaven, saying, 'These words shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.*

* 3: 21.

But while parents cannot be released from the obligation to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, they may find that one of the best means of doing this, is to employ the aid of others. It may greatly contribute to the attainment of the grand object, and yet leave much for parents themselves to perform. It may, in our circumstances, possess various manifest advantages. And it may be admirably adapted to encourage our children, and to extend to the children of others the same benefits which we would confer upon our own. Whenever this is the case, it is most obvious that the aid of others should be sought. And all must admit that this is now pre-eminently the case with respect to the aid which is found in the Lord's-day school. If any man doubt it, let him be more fully informed on the subject. If he still doubt it, let him nevertheless see to it that he himself neglect not the duty expressly enjoined in the scriptures. Let him think on the value of religious instruction to his own children; let him think on its value to the children of his neighbors; let him bear them on his heart in prayer to God; and we may hope that his doubts will soon pass away.

We, dear brethren, are fully persuaded in our own minds. We see how happily the idea of Christian instruction in the family, and in the Lord's-day school, accords with all that we, as Baptists, believe to be the mind of Christ. Let us convince our erring brethren of other denominations, that his disciples can feel the force of the divine command, Bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, without performing a ceremony that has not been commanded, and that would displace and annihilate a ceremony that has been commanded,—the solemn act of the believer's being baptized upon the profession of his faith in Him who died for him, and rose again.

At no former period have our churches felt a deeper interest in Lord's-day schools, and Bible classes; and some of them are bringing increased attention to these methods of doing good, into a close and endearing connection with their respective associations. Thus they ascertain what has been done, and what remains to be done : they are benefitted by each other's experience ; they take sweet counsel together, they consider how they can help and encourage each other, and they return home with new zeal, and with new confidence, that their labors in this, and in other spheres of duty will not be in vain.

*Deut. 6: 6, 7.

On the subject of which we have been treating, as well as in all other truly Christian enterprises, it surely becomes us as a denomination, to be among the foremost of those who exhibit and exemplify 'encouragements to religious effort.' Let us thank God, and take courage, in view of what has already been accomplished for the rising generation, and in view of the indications which we are permitted to behold, that a brighter day is dawning upon the world.

In the course of the year past, a divine blessing has attended the ordinary and the extraordinary means of grace enjoyed in the churches. Multitudes have been converted to God. But amidst the various efforts that have been so signally honored, the duty of giving Christian instruction to children, still holds a prominent place. It must not, and it cannot be forgotten ; for it possesses an enduring importance which no event has diminished, and which no language can adequately express.

We have seen on what a deep and broad foundation this duty rests : It is the manifest dictate of reason and affection ; it is implied in the general direction to make the gospel known, and it is expressly enjoined. We have glanced at some of the other considerations, by which the duty is urged upon us ; the susceptibility of the mind in childhood ; the effect on the community ; the consequences beyond the grave ; and the uncertainty of life,—of our own lives, and of the lives of our children. And we have seen that this duty must be performed in the most affectionate and engaging manner, that, accordingly, and as one of the means of attaining the grand object, the aid of the Lord's-day school should be employed for our own children, and for the children of others, and yet that we who are parents should remember, we ourselves still have much to perform. Here is ample scope for the efforts of teachers and of parents. Here is a great and most blessed work to be done, and it may well call forth the unwearied attention of pastors and churches, and of all that can render assistance. Momentous responsibilities rest upon us all. On every side we see the dear young immortals intrusted to our care. Shall they be formed for usefulness and glory, and bliss? Or shall they be neglected, and ruined for time and for eternity? O may we abound in prayer to God for them and for ourselves. Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children, and let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea, the work of our hands, establish THOU it.

Praying thus, brethren, we proceed with new courage, we bid you God speed, and continue, as ever, yours in faith and love.

APPENDIX.

The following remarks, from an address by a dear and highly esteemed brother and fellow-laborer, Professor Ripley, of Newton, are so important and so intimately connected with the subject of the preceding Letter, that they cannot fail of being read with interest and with profit.

It is the obvious dictate of revelation, and strong principles natural to the human heart coincide with this dictate, that parents should have much to do with the religious instruction of their children. The natural affection which a parent must feel for his offspring, and the confidence which a child reposes on the instructions of his parents, are peculiarly favorable circumstances. Besides, who, like a judicious parent, can seize the proper times, and deal out instruction in the proper measures? Who like him can bear with the peevishness and childishness of the little scholar, and can know when to curb and when to excite? With parental instruction, nothing should be allowed to interfere. But unless I greatly mistake, there is danger that many parents may feel themselves exempted from this duty, in consequence of the advantages which the Sabbath school furnishes. The ignorance and the indolence of many parents may shelter themselves under the wing of the Sabbath school; and even natural affection may plead for an exemption from this duty, by intrusting the performance of it to those who are supposed to be more capable of discharging it.

Parents may also think themselves excused from personally instructing their children, on account of the irregularity with which their own instructions would have to be imparted. By not rightly distributing their time, or by not rigidly adhering to a right distribution, they find various things interfering with each other, and not unfrequently some of their duties wholly neglected; and the long intervals which occur are specially injurious to their children's advancement in the knowledge of the Bible. By irregularity and various sorts of mismanagement, the waywardness of their children increases, and the parents may come at length to the settled belief, (and perhaps in their case, after having spoiled their children, it may be true,) that almost any one can do more good to their children, than they can themselves. But whatever may be said of the Sabbath school as furnishing a system of correctives for children who have been the victims of such mismanagement, it is certain that those parents greatly err, who deliberately neglect the religious instruction of their children, at a very early period, in consequence of the provisions which Sabbath schools furnish. The truth is, these schools are intended not to supersede, but to assist domestic instruction, and nothing can be plainer than that the benefits of Sabbath schools must be exceedingly restricted, unless the scholars receive at home instruction that may prepare them for the school, and instruction suited to deepen the impression which the school exercises may make. I fear also that parents who may be willing to relieve themselves of responsibility by placing it upon others, will directly counteract the good which they profess to desire for their children from the Sabbath school, and which they flatter themselves will more readily be gained from the school, than from parental instruction; for such a shrinking from responsibility, or rather such a glad withdrawing of themselves from it, will have a baleful influence upon their whole characters, and will produce in numerous particulars, a carelessness of conduct, and an unconcern respecting the example they set before their children.

The true interests of the rising generation, then, and no less the true interests of Sabbath Schools, require that parents should cherish a deep sense of their personal responsibility, and should regard the Sabbath school chiefly as a most valuable auxiliary to their own efforts. The altar of domestic devotion must not be deserted, because we can resort to the public altar of the sanctuary. Upon no pretence must the vivifying heat of family religion be chilled. The assiduities of parental care cannot safely be superseded by any other anxiety, by any other diligence, however intense, however constant. Let parents, then, be continually reminded, that while divine authority proclaims, 'Children obey your parents in the Lord;' the same authority proclaims with a plainness which cannot be misunderstood, and an urgency which must never be unheeded, 'Ye fathers bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' Whatever other persons may do in the training up of children, upon parents is laid an injunction from the High and Holy one. Let parents feel the force of this injunction, and in their endeavors to comply with it, let them avail themselves of the advantages which the Sabbath school furnishes; and remember too, that the increase of advantages for rightly training their children, increases their obligations to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

I have mentioned an error into which parents may be led ; and now let me direct your thoughts to one into which pastors may fall.

It has always appeared to me of immense importance that a pastor should endeavor to maintain a very intimate and affectionate intercourse with the children of his congregation. These constitute the most interesting, in many respects, and the most hopeful part of his charge. If, at an early period, he acquires their confidence and produces in their minds a conviction that he is their friend, their affectionate well-wisher, their willing and patient benefactor, with how much profit may he believe that in after-life they will listen to his instructions ; how slow will they be to abandon him for a teacher of a different faith ; with how much confidence may he anticipate that with many of them he shall sit down in the kingdom of his Saviour.

It is a mistake, I fear, that children will, as a matter of course, regard their minister with affectionate reverence and confidence. They may indeed regard him with distant respect and awe. Thinking of him only in connection with the services of religion, and as the individual who has not unfrequently caused their consciences to give them pain, they may feel uneasy in his presence ; they may endeavor to avoid his sight, and even subject themselves to no little inconvenience in order to escape his observation. Some effort, then, is needed on his part to produce an attachment to his person. His pastoral visitation of families, if judiciously conducted, will do somewhat towards gaining their affections. The esteem which their parents manifest towards him will exert an additional influence. But to these let there be added regular opportunities of meeting the children in an affectionate and tender manner for religious instruction and advice ; and I cannot but think a very desirable state of feeling will exist both in the pastor and in the children.

But, as it is in the case of parents, so it is in the case of pastors. Too many of them are not wholly free from a willingness to diminish their cares, and to presume that, although in different circumstances it would be an indispensable duty to exercise a personal supervision over the children, yet, as religious instruction is so copiously imparted in the Sabbath school, the work is accomplished to better effect than it could be by their exertions. It is indeed done to better effect by the Sabbath school arrangements than it was done previously to the existence of Sabbath schools; but it is not done to so much effect as it would be, if to the weekly efforts of the school teacher, were added the monthly attentions of the pastor.

Nor can it be justly said in excuse for this neglect on the part of pastors, that the arrangements for Bible class instruction furnish sufficient opportunities for bringing the pastor into intimate connection with the youthful part of his society. Of the value of Bible class instruction, and of its happily supplying a void that had existed for ages, I am very sensible. But it is not enough that the pastor form an intimate acquaintance with the young, and exert his influence over them in the form of a Bible class. For a large number, though at an early period connected with the Sabbath school, do not become members of a Bible class. Especially is this true respecting lads who sooner leave the paternal roof, and are exposed to more powerful temptations than their sisters, and who, moreover, frequently at an unsuitable age, are removed to a distance from parents, and placed in circumstances almost entirely new. How desirable, then, that the assiduous care of pastors should be extended towards them at that which may well be called the forming period of their lives. Again, how often does the bloom of childhood yield to the paleness of death! The little immortal comes forth as a flower, and is cut down. Would it not be a pleasant reflection to the pastor, as he is consoling the afflicted parents, as he looks upon the coffin which contains the desire of their eyes, would it not be a pleasant reflection, that that child knew him, and loved him, and confided in him; that that child he had often met in company with others, for purposes of the highest import; that for the salvation of that child he had often felt earnest desires, and poured forth fervent prayers?

I would affectionately suggest it for your consideration, whether pastors ought not occasionally, and without long intervals, to be present in the Sabbath school, and to show the interest which they feel in the instruction of the young; and whether, besides this occasional attendance, they ought not to appoint stated times for meeting the children, either in order to review the Sabbath school lessons, or to impart different, though kindred instruction.

For a most judicious and instructive view of various particulars that call for the parent's attention, see Letters on Christian Education; by a Mother. They constitute a Tract, (Number 73,) of the series published by the Baptist General Tract Society.

THE CHRISTIAN'S STEWARDSHIP.

Two facts are observable, in the walks of life, which strikingly correspond to declarations in the Bible, concerning two descriptions of character. The first is, that those, whether rich or poor, who have a conscientious respect to the temporal and spiritual necessities of their fellow-men, and to the will of their Creator in the use and disposal of their possessions, have the purest and most lively enjoyment of the blessings of this life; and drink most abundantly of the pure stream of consolation which flows from the throne of God. The scripture that corresponds with this fact is, "The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

He, on the contrary, whether unregenerate or christian, who, turning his attention from the Divine will, determines the manner of using and disposing of his property by his own desires and partialities, and consigns to the control of his pride and ambition that portion which humility and confidence in God would relinquish to the relief of the needy; knows least of the enjoyments which flow from earth or heaven.—And this fact corresponds with the declaration, "There is that withholdeth more than is meet; but it tendeth to poverty."

The first character is that most frequently witnessed, when the powers of the soul are first rectified by the renewing of the Holy Spirit:—when the heart is first elevated to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." The latter is an instance of degeneracy, produced by the maxims of a world which, amid all the demonstrations of an overruling providence that surround us, knows not God. The former receives the blessings of Heaven as a gift; and enjoys them with all the zest which a lively gratitude can impart: while the latter receives them as a matter of course, and a matter of right, and discovers not, or heeds not, the kind hand which bestows them. How greatly is it to be deplored that the last description of character is so prevalent as it is, among those who have been redeemed, not with silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ! For, what might not the energies of the Christian host effect, with the promised blessing of God, were but those energies all aroused and properly directed!

This degeneracy is a consequence of inattention to the origin of our mercies, and forgetfulness of our absolute dependence on God, even for the most ordinary and constant streams of prosperity with which our lives are refreshed.

There is a fondness in the heart for whatsoever presents itself in the shape of an antidote to the ills of life, and as a means of promoting our happiness; and consequently a proneness to suffer the attention to be engrossed with the gift, while the Giver, because unseen, is forgotten. Hence it comes to pass, that we look on what we possess as our own: to be held by us, our heirs, and assigns, forever; in fee simple of man, and quit claim of God: and whenever the idea of obligation is brought before the mind, we are apt to ask, as if neither man nor God had a right to negative the question: "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?—to save or destroy; to give or withhold?" From this source has arisen a ruinous mistake in the calculations of many, concerning the extent of our accountability. While it is admitted that we must give an account of the deeds done in the body, according to their moral character; it is forgotten that this accountability is, in any manner, regulated by the circumstances of temporal blessings in which the providence of God has placed us: that we are stewards of his goods, and have to give an account of our stewardship. Hence, while the rightful claim of Heaven to that obedience, the capacity of rendering which lies equally in the breasts of all, is admitted; the relinquishment of any portion of property for the promotion of the cause of truth, or for the relief of distress, is considered as a free gift, which entitles the giver not only to the gratitude of the object aided, but to a score of credit in the book of his account with God.

Now this is an error which loudly demands correction: inasmuch as, in some, it is to be feared that it is the ground of a false confidence of their acceptance with God, by the preponderance of their charities against their transgressions: while in multitudes of those who have fled for refuge to a better hope, it subjects the heart to the pride of life, and consequently often shuts the hand, while the voice of duty, which bids bestow, is unheard. The most effectual method to correct these evils is, to consider attentively and habitually,

The character we sustain:

The source of our prosperity:

The nature of our tenure; and,

The responsibilities with which it is connected.

In contemplating our character, we should remember that we are but men: the wealthiest, the proudest, the mightiest of us, is but a man: a creature who, but yesterday, embarked on the sea of life with nothing but ignorance and helplessness; a common adventurer, among the thousands of his kind, amid the perils and uncertainties of the winds and the waves: and who, even in the day of his greatest strength and loftiest pride, can neither persuade nor terrify the minister of disease, nor resist the demands of death, nor beguile the worm of his prey. In all his glory, he is but dust and to the dust he must return.

Now if we brought nothing into the world, it behooves us to consider how we came into possession of that which he have. Under the influence of the error of which we have spoken, the FARMER will tell us that he has arisen to a comfortable independence by his own industry,—“by the sweat of his brow:” and, that the hard earned products of his labour he knows how to value, and he knows how to keep. But we would ask, of what avail is all his labour? Does it dissolve the snows of winter, and break the chains in which the earth is held? Does it move forward the revolutions of the seasons from winter to seed-time, and from seed-time to harvest? Does it raise the vapours from the earth and ocean, and mould them into clouds? Does it bring down the rain, "the former and the latter rain?" Does it cause the sun to warm the bosom of the ground into which he casts his seed? Then why does he ever labour for nought, or spend his strength in vain?

We suppose it was while he was asleep that the blasting and mildew destroyed his hopes: and because he was ignorant of the mischief, that the fly took the blossom, and the worm, the root. Oh, no! He who gave light and joy to the land of Goshen, and darkness and pestilence and death to Egypt; HE it is who rolls on the seasons: who commands the wintry blast from his northern stores, or gives the glowing breath of summer skies.

At his command the morning ray
Smiles on the earth and leads the day;
He guides the sun's declining wheels
Over the tops of western hills.

Seasons and times obey His voice:—
The evening and the morn rejoice
To see the earth made soft with show'rs, Laden with fruit, and dressed in flow'rs.

The MERCHANT, whose warehouses are filled with goods, is apt to feel no less freedom from obligation than the yeoman; and when interrogated, whence he received them, will be likely to tell us that he purchased them; that he imported them. But who, we would ask, prospered your industry with the means? Who gave to your canvass the favouring wind which wafted them to you: and, why did not He who blessed you with gentle gales, meet you with impoverishing whirlwinds and devouring tempests?

The prosperity of the MECHANIC, is the result of the industrious exercise of his muscular powers and of his skill. But we would ask him whence came these powers, and whence this skill? That they are not among the inseparable endowments of humanity you may learn by a visit to the abode of the idiot ; the cell of the lunatic ; and the couch, where the victims of agues, consumptions, and fevers lie agonizing and helpless.

The PHYSICIAN advances in reputation, and in the confidence of the community, and consequently in wealth, by the happy exercise of his professional skill. But whence hath this man this wisdom? Omitting to say any thing of his accomplishments in the theory of physic, which, amid the ten thousand diversified forms and shades of character that disease assumes, is, of itself, of so little avail; how came he into the possession of that quick and nice discernment, by which he so successfully detects the lurking foe in the machinery of the human frame; ascertains his direction and his power; and by which he is enabled to apply the appropriate and timely remedy, to stay the work of destruction, and to repair the injury sustained?

The COUNSELLOR and the STATESMAN are crowned with honour; and with a meet reward for their successful support of the rights and the interests with which they have been entrusted. But, from whom did they receive that retentiveness of memory which secures the fund of knowledge they have laboured for years to obtain? Who gave them that vigorous comprehension; that rapidity of conception; that liveliness of feeling; that promptitude; that grace; that force of communication; which at once enlighten the understanding, control the judgment, and captivate the heart? —All, all is the boon of Heaven: the Farmer, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Physician, the Counsellor, the Statesman, all are endowed with whatsoever of prosperity, of favour they possess, by the “Father of lights from whom cometh down every good and every perfect gift.”

It being then conceded, that for whatever of worldly blessings we possess, we are indebted to the bounty of God; let us consider,

The nature of the tenure by which we hold them.

Nothing can be more certain than this; that if we hold any thing by absolute right, it would be absolutely wrong for any man to wrest it from us. It is equally certain, that if we hold our possessions by a right as perfect with respect to God, as we do with respect to man, Jehovah himself has no right to take them from us without our consent. If he does therefore take them, either the God of justice has become unjust; or, our right is, by our very adversities, proved imperfect.

But it is certain that riches do take to themselves wings and fly away: that the conflagration sometimes wraps them in ruin, and consigns their owners to wretchedness and sorrow. It is certain that the tempests and the floods, sometimes do sweep our floating treasures to "the dark unfathomed caves of ocean." It is certain that the scorching sun consumes the husbandman's hope; and that after all his labours of sowing and planting, and his watchful care—after he has done his utmost, the seed is sometimes "rotten under the clod; the garners are laid desolate; the barns are broken down, for the corn is withered; and the beasts groan, and the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture: and the flocks of sheep are made desolate and the beasts of the field cry unto God, for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness."

It is certain that the insect tribes of the air, in alliance with the creeping inhabitants of the ground, which the God of judgment calls his great army, do march forth in dark and fearful array; and "that which the palmer-worm hath left, hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left, hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left, hath the caterpillar eaten." Yet the God of judgment—the God of the winds and of the waves, the fire and the tempest,—the leader of this desolating and irresistible army, is a "God of truth, without iniquity; just and right is he." And we have as little right to question his doings, as power to stay his hand: and, in the midst of all, we are bound to cherish the sentiment and the temper of a sufferer of ancient time: "the Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

Brethren, examine the character, and the sufferings, of the man whose words we have just quoted; and you will learn that we are tenants at will. Now, that we are amenable to God for the use we make of his bounties, is a reasonable and necessary consequence of the tenure by which we hold them. The truth is, they are, strictly speaking, His: and are committed to our trust, to be used and disposed of, by us, in accordance with his revealed will.

That they are not bestowed to be employed as our own predilections and our often erroneous judgments of our interests shall prompt, is evident.

The very idea of prosperity is connected with the promotion of happiness: and as all real prosperity comes from God, the bestowment of wealth, which preserves from many of the ills incident to life, and which ministers to our innocent enjoyments, is a clear indication of his benevolence, and of his design in giving them for our use.

No one can doubt that the Almighty clothes the earth with verdure, and covers the fields with waving plenty, for the promotion of the happiness of his creatures.

But the good which the husbandman possesses is only a single variety of that wealth, all the varieties of which spring from the same source, and are all imparted for the same end.

He who is prospered with more than is requisite for the attainment of his own happiness, has received the surplus for the same general end for which the rest was given: he is therefore entrusted with the means of happiness to others. Consequently, he is not at liberty to cast it into the fire, to bury it in the earth, or to merge it in the flood: nor, least of all, is he at liberty to make it subservient to the violation of the laws of God the giver, in licentious prodigality.

Perhaps there is no disposition more prevalent among those who are under the influence of moral principles at all, than that which prompts them to accumulate wealth for their posterity. Now, if this disposition, to the extent to which it is generally indulged, received the Divine approbation; the indulgence of it would tend to the promotion of happiness—the happiness of the parents, as following out the direction of God's plea-ture: and the happiness of the children, as coming in the possession of an unperverted trust.

But, that you may judge whether this object is attained by the spirit of accumulation which is abroad in society, we would have you take a tour of minute and careful observation through the different walks of life. Go, read the histories of families from the father to the son; and the history of the son from infancy to manhood. Trace the effects which meet your daily notice, up to their legitimate, but frequently, not obvious causes. Consider, on the one hand, the condition and the real enjoyments of those who, possessing a competency, exchange the redundance of their income, for the pleasure of doing good; either in the way of enlightening the ignorant, or in reclaiming the vicious, or in feeding the hungry, or in clothing the naked and succouring the distressed. Observe their early and well-formed habits of activity, which are so conducive to health—the basis of all sublunary enjoyment. Witness the flow of their spirits; and their contentment, which remains undisturbed amid all the enticements of the influence and honors of fortune. Mark well the sound constitutions and the industrious habits of their rising posterity; who expect, from their parents, no more than a frugal beginning in life, depending for their subsequent prosperity, on the faithful practice of those lessons of industry and virtue, with which their tender minds were imbued by parental piety.

Consider, we say, and compare this course of procedure and its attendant blessings, with that in which the cumbrous accumulation of wealth, and the aggrandizement of family by the privileges of fortune, are the objects of supreme regard: where the avarice of gain steels the heart against the voice of imploring woe, and locks up from its own enjoyment, the abundance already possessed:—where luxury pours its poisons into the cup of infancy, and is the companion of the nursery and the physician of childhood: where youth, unacquainted with the checks of that happy medium which is independence to virtue, but poverty to vice, is accustomed to every gratification which wealth abused can bring: and, Oh! would to God ten thousand melancholy examples did not compel us to proceed—where deliverance from all concern about a livelihood, lifts the youthful mind above all feeling of dependence on man or God; raises the floodgate of every passion, and turns the whole mind and soul adrift in a sea of licentious pleasure, ending in poverty and pain, a constitution shattered and broken, and a soul in despair.

Compare the two descriptions, and we think it will be no difficult matter for a common discernment to determine in favour of which system of procedure the balance of substantial enjoyment turns. On that side rests the approbation of God, for it is that which accomplishes the end for which his bounties are conferred. And on the other falls his frown, for his goods have been perverted to forbidden purposes.

In the very miseries, therefore, consequent upon such a perversion, or, if you will, in the very constitution of nature, by which the blessings of Jehovah are, in their abuse, transformed into curses, we recognise both his right and his intention to call us to account for the manner in which we have used them.

It being then established, that we have received from him every good we possess, that so far from his relinquishing his right in the bounty, he has made us accountable for the use and disposal of the whole, and that the bestowment confers not only obligations of gratitude but of service; the question becomes, to every honest steward of the Creator's bounties, a matter of deeply interesting inquiry:—How much do I owe to my Lord? For, on whatever objects I expend that which he has entrusted to me, and whatever responsibilities these favours may impose on them; still I have to account to God for all I have received at his hand. A portion of what he has given me is undoubtedly to be "occupied" for the promotion of my own happiness, and the happiness of those whom he has entrusted to my care: but what proportion is best calculated for the attainment of this end, and what he has required to be expended for Him:—are questions which demand my most impartial and prayerful investigation.

Yes! they are questions the importance of which is magnified by all the pleasure of doing good, and by all the peace of a conscience void of offence towards God; and by all the terrors of being weighed in the balance of his justice and found wanting:—questions, Brethren, which, thankfully remembering how great the disparity between what you receive at his hand, and what, as imperfect and sinful, you merit, you must determine by the light which the Bible throws on your responsibilities, and which the records of providence shed on the designs of your Benefactor in the dispensations of his gifts.

And having ascertained the extent of your obligations, suffer yourselves to be induced to the discharge of them. Oh, by all the considerations of gratitude, by all the motives of self-enjoyment, and by all the impulses of self-interest as well as of duty, suffer yourselves to be stimulated to a prompt discharge of those obligations, in promoting the temporal and spiritual welfare of your fellow-men.

We say, of self-enjoyment, because that undue anxiety for accumulation, which resists the demands of Charity and Religion, is destructive of the finest feelings, and the richest bliss of the soul: and if it does not deliver it to the lashes of conscience, it renders it an utter stranger to that pure and godlike pleasure which springs from doing good. And we have said, of self-interest, because the Christian who is growing rich, by withholding what the Lord demands, is absolutely growing poor, by confining the enjoyment of his wealth, to the short portion of his existence which he passes on earth: while it is in his power to export his possessions to the shores of eternity. Yes, Brethren, there is such a thing as almost literally laying up our treasures in heaven. “I say unto you, make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.”—I say unto you secure the friendship and gratitude of those who are poor in this world but rich in faith, by contributing from that which so many hoard and worship, to the relief of their temporal, and spiritual necessities: that when ye die, those whom you have blessed, and who have gone before you may hail you with grateful joy, and bid you welcome to the mansions of everlasting rest. Here then, the bliss of the world above will be affected in a most interesting point by your works of charity below; and the pleasures which burn in the beneficent bosom on earth are to be re-kindled in the world to come.

But above all things else, Brethren, be incited to a diligent and faithful discharge of the duties of your stewardship, by the consideration of that greatest gift to you, which Heaven ever gave to man. Consider that "he who was rich, for your sakes, became poor, that you through his poverty, might be made rich:" rich in everlasting habitations; rich in spotless robes of righteousness; rich in unfading diadems of glory; rich in a right to the tree of life, and the crystal waters that flow from the throne of God.

And in anticipation of your robe and crown, your habitation and rest, in that land where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal, where the flames cannot devour, nor nor the hand of time deface, rise to your duty: and what your hand findeth to do, do it with your might.

The cause of suffering humanity entreats your aid. Remember the poor whom ye have always with you; and to whom, whensoever ye will, ye may do good. Whensoever ye will, ye may deliver the fatherless, and him that hath none to help him: whensoever ye will, ye may cause the widow's heart to sing for joy, and the blessing of him that is ready to perish to come upon yourselves.

The period has been foretold when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. That period is at hand: and most animating must the reflection be to every friend of God. But it must not be forgotten, that it is through the instrumentality of the saints, that the Redeemer is to diffuse the knowledge of his grace among the nations, and bring the world into subjection, under the reign of his love. The age and circumstances then, in which we live, call for pre-eminent Christian activity, and a consecration of heart and life, of talents and wealth to Him, whose we are, and whom we serve.

